Tourist Trade Now Expects Los Angeles Games Will Be a Financial Bust

Herzog Calls in Labor, Likud Leaders In a Move to Advance Coalition Talks

JERUSALEM - President Chaim Herzog of Israel sought Monday to advance Israel's lagging talks on a coalition government by calling in the leaders of the two major political blocs for informal official results are not expected to change the unofficial tallies that showed 13 other parties in control of 35 seats, producing an apparent impasse in efforts to form a 61-vote governing coalition in the 120-member Knesset, or parliament.

Once the final figures are published, Mr. Herzog plans to begin formal discussions with all or most of the Knesset party leaders in order to determine who has the best chance to form a government.

An official in Mr. Herzog's office said that, in an unusual move, the president was meeting with the leaders of the major blocs informally at first "because he wants to see how it's going."

Mr. Herzog is understood to favor a national unity government. It could bring the major parties together, at least initially to help resolve the nation's economic ills, in a wide coalition that would not be dependent on the smaller parties and their ideological demands. Both Mr. Shamir and Mr. Per have been saying they favor such a wide coalition. But they have also been courting the small parties to form a more narrow coalition. Likud now seems in a better position than Labor because the demands of the four religious parties are apparently more acceptable to the right-wing Likud than to the Labor alignment. That became apparent Sunday when Shas, or the Sephardi Torah Guardians Party, with four seats.

said it was "strongly inclined" to join a Likud coalition. Mr. Peres then met with Shas leaders and said the decision was "not irrevocable." The religious parties had been members of Labor coalitions for the many years that Labor dominated the political scene here, and they were also members of the last two governments led by Likud. Their leaders have indicated that they were able to gain more religious concessions under Likud, but that might have been because these were narrower coalitions and therefore less resistant to demands by partners.

Ezer Weizman, leader of the three-member Yahad Party, which he has said could go with either Likud or Labor blocs, also has been talking to rabbis and other leaders of the religious parties.

Last Unit Of Marines Leaves as U.S. Shifts Embassy

BEIRUT - The last U.S. Ma rine combat troops in Lebanon began pulling out of Beirut on Mon-day, leaving guard duty at the new U.S. Embassy to a few marines and Lebanese security men.

Three amphibious assault vehi cles carried a group of marines to the West Beirut waterfront at dawn and into the Mediterranean for the short ride to two U.S. ships off-

The departure of about 100 combat troops from the 22d Marine Amphibious Unit was expected to take two days, coinciding with the U.S. Embassy's move into new offices in East and West Beirut. It appeared that fewer than half left Monday, but embassy officials declined comment.

The move came as militias exchanged sniper fire southeast of the capital and the Lebanese government cleared more barricades from highways linking Christian East and mainly Moslem West Beirut.

Marine combat units were diverted from Lebanon's multinational peace-keeping force to guard U.S. diplomats. The marines served as backup to the embassy's regular marine security guard contingent when American diplomats crowded into Britain's embassy on West Beirut's waterfront after the truck bombing of the old U.S. Embassy in April 1983. Sixty-three persons were killed in the attack.

With the departure of the 22d Marine Amphibious Unit, the new U.S. Embassy will be guarded by about 15 marines and a special Lebanese security force that will include former Druze and Shiite Moslem militiamen, U.S. officials

Failure of Talks in Iraq Further Divides Kurds

By David B. Ottaway Rashington Fest Service

BAGHDAD - Negotiations between Baghdad and one of the main leaders of Kurdish rebels in northern Iraq have broken down, leaving the Kurds more divided and the central government stronger, according to Iraqi and western diplomatic sources.

The talks, under way since November, reportedly continued inconclusively until May, when clashes between Iraqi security forces and Kurdish vouths who were holding protests in several northern towns apparently provoked their collapse. Since then, there have been no negotiations, according to the sources.

The Iraqi government has said nothing official about the talks. Latif Jassem, the Iraqi information minister, recently said only that a dialogue was still taking place.

He insisted that conditions in - Iraq's three northern Kurdish provinces were excellent and cited the presence of 50,000 Kurds in Iray's army as proof of their support for the central government and its war against Iran.

"Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini was wrong in his gamble that he would be able to come into Iraq through Kurdistan," Mr. Jassem said. "Our Kurdish people are with the revolution, the country and President Saddam Hussein.

But there is also a sizable Kurdish minority in the mountains of northern Iran, and one side effect of the war between Iran and Iraq has been to rekindle Kurdish demands for greater autonomy in both countries.

Baghdad and Tehran have deliberately sought to provoke a Kurdish rebellion in each other's northem provinces, hoping to weaken the other country.

The result has been a fragmentation of the Kurdish populations in the two countries. Some Kurdish leaders have sided with the central governments and others taken up arms against them.

In Iraq, one of the main opposition Kurdish factions is led by Idriss and Masoud Barzani, sons of the late mullah Mustafa Barzani. The elder Barzani headed a revolt in the north prior to the so-called Algiers Agreement in 1975, which temporarily settled a border dispute between Iran and Iraq. Under that accord, the leaders of both countries agreed to stop aiding the on July 22, 1944, is a matter of contention. The officially supported view is that the people who gathered first in Chelm and later in Lublin were an eclectic group of patriots who came together more or less spontaneously.

There is another view, prevalent in the West. The British historian Norman Davies, for example, argues that "despite later legends, the Lublin Committee was created in Moscow and imposed by the Soviet major ambitions of President Mr. Aquino Ferdinand E. Marcos was to make the Philippines the "tourist and convention center of Asia."

For a while, after prodigious quantities of government money were spent on building huxury hotels and a convention center, it seemed to many that the Philippines was on its way toward achieving that ambition.

Today the hotels are deserted.

Travel agencies and tour businesses are closing in droves.

According to the Ministry of Tourism, tourist arrivals were down 12 percent in the first three months of this year, compared with the same period a year ago.

Travel agents and others in the business say the situation is far worse. "It's a disaster." Tyler Tanaka, president of Japan and Orient Tours in Los Angeles, said of the falloff in bookings to the Philippines since last autumn.

U.S. May Scrap $4.2-Billion Air Defense Gun

By Kathleen Day

Los Angeles Times Service .

NEWPORT BEACH, California — The Pentagon is considering scrapping the U.S. Army's $4.2billion air defense gun, named Ser-geant York after a World War I

> Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger disclosed last week that the Pentagon may find it "necessary to get a whole new system" if performance and scheduling problems persist with the weapons system, which Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp. is building in Newport Beach.

Designed to defend troops from low-flying aircraft, each York is a computerized gun and radar system that is mounted on a tank chassis. The army already has committed about $1 billion for 130 of the guns and has tentatively agreed to buy 488 more by 1990.

The statement said the six men had abused their tourist status because they "dared to criticize the constitutional and democratic government" of Honduras, "its institutions and its armed forces, in blatant violation of Honduran laws." Participants at the demonstration Friday called for the removal of the U.S. troops involved in ma-

The High Price of Credit

Is money tight? Interest rates are certainly high, but that is no longer the same thing. Before interest was deregulated, American borrowers had great trouble finding banks willing to lend when the rates went too high. That was because the banks could not legally charge enough interest to cover their own costs. But now that all the limits are off, banks have plenty of money to lend. Credit is not scarce. It is only expensive.

Paul Volcker, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, told Congress last week that he and his colleagues have not tightened the money supply over the past several months and are not doing so now. But interest rates have risen about one percentage point since March. If the Federal Reserve is not doing it, who is responsible? The prime suspect is Adam Smith.

Rates are going up because the demand for credit is going up very rapidly and the banks are under pressure to attract more deposits, increasingly from other countries. In the United States, business borrowing has reached record levels. Consumer borrowing is up. And the federal government continues to run that enormous deficit,

An odd thing is happening. The American economy is adapting with astonishing speed to these very high interest rates. That is why both the demand for credit and the economy itself have been expanding much faster than anyone expected last winter. The tax system encourages this adaptation by making interest costs deductible from taxable income. The federal government, through those deductions, pays something between a quarter and a half of the interest on most loans, depending on the borrower's tax bracket. Inflation, even at its present low level, pays another quarter of it. For most borrowers, the rates are not as high as they might look at first glance. But even after taxes and after inflation, they are a lot higher than they have been traditionally.

These rates are having an unhealthy effect on U.S. economic development. They are making investment expensive, and that will not be good for industrial performance and productivity over the long haul. Low investment has been a matter of concern for some time. In 1980 the Republicans charged that under President Jimmy Carter's policies business investment was dangerously low. It was 11.7 percent of the gross national product that year. Under Mr. Reagan, it fell with the recession and has been rising with the recovery, though damp-ened by the high interest burdens it carries.

The figures for business investment in the spring quarter were published last week. Americans will be reassured to know that, as a proportion of GNP, it was almost as high as it had been when Mr. Carter left office.

Glimmerings in Guatemala

There is a glimmer of hope for a democratic revival in Guatemala, where centrist parties led the field in the July I vote for a constituent assembly. But it is only a glimmer. The assembly will be confined to the single task of drafting Guatemala's fifth constitution in 40 years. Though the ruling generals promise to yield to an elected president in 1985, experience argues against believing them.

The elections have already been revised to give a rightist coalition the largest bloc of assembly seats, even though it placed third in the returns. This may preview things to come. Guatemala has been governed mostly from the barracks since 1954, when a coup supported by the United States ousted an elected leftist president. Regimes since then have ranged from the merely corrupt to the savagely repressive. More than 45,000 Guatemalans have fled to Mexico, pressured by an antiguerrilla campaign that saw many Indian villages routinely harassed and often destroyed. Still, there are tokens of change. The current president, General Oscar Mejia Victores, says the threat of subversion has passed and so presumably has the justification for military rule. Accordingly, the two front-running centrist parties are pressing for a genuine amnesty and legalization of Marxist parties.

And the assembly winners included four Indians, one of them the first candidate of an all-Indian party. Though half of Guatemala's seven million people are Indian, Spanishspeakers monopolize its politics.

Guatemala's stability may well depend on how wisely the armed forces respond to these trends. Some officers see tradition-bound Indians as natural anti-Communist allies; others see them as natural recruits for the highland guerrillas. While the argument goes on, those who work with Indians are at serious risk. Four bilingual educators have been killed since 1983, two of them contract employees in United States aid programs.

Because of these killings, the U.S. Congress suspended economic aid a year ago. Military aid was held up in 1977 when Guatemala refused to submit to human rights conditions. Yielding to Reagan administration pleas, Congress has now given preliminary approval to a $230-million package of economic and military aid. Guatemala says it does not need guns, just money, please. So be it.

But why not pay an installment after the constitution is written, and the rest when Guatemala holds its presidential election and honors the result?

George Gallup: His Legacy

George Gallup, who died Thursday at 82. belonged to a generation of entrepreneurial pollsters who sought to learn what "the common man" was thinking. He developed a deep commitment to reporting those views, lest they be trampled by powerful special interests. And so his name became a household word and the techniques he championed made polls a vital tool of American politics and commerce.

Polling's mature life began with the Crash of '36, when The Literary Digest, after accurately 10 million mail ballots to forecast a decisive are shaping not only political contests but victory for Alf Landon. Franklin D. Roosevelt's landslide victory buried Landon and the polls with uncarned derision. Mr. Gallup led the defense, slowly instructing the skeptical in its quality. The Digest had put too much faith in numbers of respondents, while ignoring that most were affluent and likely to vote Republican. Only a scientifically selected cross section deserved credibility, Mr. Gallup showed.

Even sophisticated polls can be wrong, of course. Mr. Gallup miscalled the election of 1948. And now that hundreds of polls are used to measure the voter's every pulse, the voice has become volatile and aroused new doubts government itself. They obviously provide a lively measure of public opinion. They are now a tool of democracy, a mighty legacy.

Wishful Thinking in Bonn

Nothing illustrates the questionable nature of Bonn's policies toward East Germany better than the one-sidedness of its latest loan to East Berlin. The West German government seems to be hoping that its subsidization of East Berlin will elicit far-reaching results from the forthcoming Bonn visit by East Germany's Erich Honecker. But if wishful thinking is excluded, the only real product of such loan transactions will be to help cement the position of the Sovietbacked Berlin regime.

A Weak Government for Israel

Like a man in a tunnel, you twist and turn trying to peer for light in Israel's electoral mathematics. But whichever coalition emerges from the deadlock of an election is bound to be weak, because it has to stagger under a load of awkward little pieces of baggage in the shape of the mini-parties, some of them rather dotty. which are created by Israel's system of proportional-representation-run-mad.

Weak government means less chance of imaginative Israeli proposals -- from a position of social cohesion as well as military strength -- on the question of the West Bank. Though the voters did not seem to recognize it. that question is still the most important that Israel has to deal with. There is now even less chance that it will be tackled at all.

1909: Taft Wins on Tariff Revision PARIS - President W.H. Taft has won the tariff fight. As the Herald's cable despatch from its Washington correspondent reported [on July 30], the Senate conferees have given way and come to an agreement on the lines laid down by the President. This victory is highly satisfactory in itself, as the new tariff will undoubtedly protect effectually the indus-trial interests of the United States, and is of good augury for the future, as it proves conclusively that Mr. Talt is a statesman with defimite views and very clear ideas as to the best way of realizing them. Without any banging of the big drum or flourishing of the big stick he has carried through his tariff revision and triumphed over the most stubborn opposition.

Of this figure $250 million represents crop losses, $150 million livestock losses, $50 million miscellaneous damage and $50 million permanent damage. Frank Reed. Federal crop statistician, said that the loss of the com crop alone in Kansas probably would approximate $600 million. Most of the streams in the drought-stricken regions are dry, while cattle are being shot in the fields. In some sections hens are deserting their nests, and eggs placed in the sun have hatched from its heat.

Two Ways of Gauging Soviet Intentions

WASHINGTON — With attention focused on whether the United States and the Soviet Union will start talking about unti-satellite weapons, it is timely to consider why Western experts on the Soviet Union, with apparently equal qualifications, so often disagree sharply on how to deal with the Russians. Consider the expertise represented by the following pairs: George Kennan and Paul Nitze; Cyrus Vance and Zbigniew Brzezinski; Marshall Shulman and Richard Pipes: The New York Times and The Wall Street Journal; the U.S. Foreign Service and the military services; the Brookings Institution and the Hoover Institution. Policies favored by one member of each of these pairs typically differ from those favored by the other.

These differences flow from differing fundamental beliefs about the Soviet system. The beliefs can be characterized as "mirror-imaging" and "power-maximizing," representing opposite ends of a spectrum along which are arrayed the members of the previously cited pairs. Of course, this is an oversimplification, appared do control plification; nuances do occur.

The mirror-imaging view holds that apparent Soviet aggressiveness. expansionism and preoccupation with military capabilities reflect Russian history and culture. These preoccupations, it is acknowledged, may border on paranoia and may take aggressive forms. Such manifestations are considered to be understandable reactions to Soviet and Russian history, including the experience of Western efforts to abort the Bolshevik Revolution, the 20 million casualties suffered by the Soviet Union in World War II, and the periodic devastation experi-enced by Russia at the hands of foreign invaders. Preoccupation with military strength is to be explained, then, mainly by this instorical legacy.

Nevertheless, according to this view, the long-term aims of the Soviet Union have something in common with those of the West: human betterment and well-being, peace, prosperity and social justice. Hence, a more forthcoming Western policy, one that combines concessions with firmness, is likely to produce over time a symmetrical rather than an exploitative response from the SoviBy Charles Wolf Jr.

et leadership, and perhaps a peace-ful evolution of the Soviet system. In the absence of such concessions, mirror-imagers tend to view prospective Soviet behavior with concern if not alarm, lest a hostile international environment, combined with increased Soviet economic stringency at home, arouse the Russians' latent paranoia and provoke aggression. These presumed responses to alternative Western policies are the core of the mirror-imaging view.

By contrast, the power-maximizing view holds that, whatever the grim experiences of Soviet and Russian history and whatever the philosophical and ideological antecedents of Soviet Communism, the overriding objective of the system is to maximize the political and mili-tary power of the Soviet state at home and to expand it abroad. Accordingly, concessions made to the Russians and agreements and transactions worked out with them are fair game for exploitation and de-ception in the interest of maximizing Soviet power.

This position denies, or at least seriously doubts, that economic and social betterment are important goals of the system as it really operates. Instead, this position views the deferral of these goals as readily acceptable to the Soviet leadership, perhaps even obscurely welcomed by it, because of its overriding preference for strengthening Soviet vigi-lance in response to the external and internal threats it sees.

Differences between the mirror imaging and power-maximizing views lead to predictable differences in the policies their adherents advocate. For instance, mirrorimagers tend to look with favor on negotiations that are initiated or fa-cilizated by Western concessions and on trade that is expanded by using some kind of subsidy, if necessary. Power-maximizers tend to favor negotiations without initial concessions, and trade without subsidies, preferring no negotiations to ionary ones and no trade or limited trade to subsidized trade.

Power-maximizers tend to emphasize the zero-sum nature of ne-with the Soviet Union (what the Soviets gain, the West and the United States lose), while mirrorimagers tend to emphasize the posi-tive-sum character of such transactions (both sides can gain from them).

Unfortunately, there is no way to provide a definitive test of which view is closer to the truth. You are forced to rely on impressions, judgments and experience to decide. You can also adopt a "hedging" strategy that tries to minimize regret. For example, apply a mirrorimaging view to a particular situa-tion, then ask: How badly off are we if it is wrong? Then do the same with a power-maximizers' view. As the American presidential campaign moves on, differences between the candidates and their party platforms on this issue will be clear enough, even if the rhetoric tries to straddle both positions.

The writer, director of the Rand Corporation's research program in international economics and dean of the Rand graduate school, contributed this view to The Washington Post.

How an Unregenerate Reagan Could Lose the Race

WASHINGTON — Before the Democrats W convened in San Francisco, the political analyst Horace W. Busby conducted a seminar on the prospects for Election Day.

He restated his belief that the Republicans have "lock" on the electoral votes of Western and Southwestern states that virtually guarantees them control of the White House in November.

"By 'lock' I am referring to the 29 states that in the last eight presidential elections have voted at least 75 percent of the time, most of them more than that, for the Republican candidate," Mr. Busby said. "Those states have 289 votes in the Electoral College. It takes 270 to win.' Well, then, someone asked, what could Ronald Reagan do to lose it? Mr. Busby, who was a key aide to Lyndon Johnson, listed two ways Mr. Reagan could do so: "He could cause himself trouble by ceasing to be presidential and becoming unduly partisan," he said. Or he could show his age.

In his first week of campaigning, Mr. Reagan demonstrated both problems. He was unpresidential, unduly partisan and he showed his age - not in the way he looked, but in the way he sounded. His tone, not his appearance, was the problem. He came across as rigid in attitude and extreme in views, precisely the qualities that accentuate his few political negatives.

This first glimpse at the real 1984 presidential campaign is instructive on several counts.

First, if last week's style becomes the norm, the country is in for a rough, no-holds-barred cam-paign. Second, when it comes to the truth, voters beware. Third, Mr. Reagan profits immensely By Haynes Johnson from the well-known advantages of being able to use the White House as a forum to dominate the news and the political dialogue. He showed again that he is adept at achieving both goals. The campaign began with a televised news con-ference that said almost as much about the press as it did about the president. Mr. Reagan, as expected, went on the offensive against the Democrats, stoutly defended his record and laid out his best case for re-election. In so doing he made a series of sweeping assertions about his achievements. Even with allowances for the natural campaign tendency to overstate the record, this performance was memorable for its excessive claims on helping the "truly needy," preserving the social safety net, being fiscally prudent, protecting the environment — and on and on. And it all went virtually unchallenged. One yearned for a Peter Lisagor to arise from the press corps and say, "Hey, wait a minute, Mr. President, bow can you say that?" - and then phrase a deadly question based on the presidential record.

Aside from content, it was the Reagan style that was riveting. He seemed unusually combative and harsh. And he continued to display those qualities while campaigning in the South and Northeast. Perhaps that will prove to be winning presidential politics in 1984. But I wonder.

Peter D. Hart, Walter F. Mondale's pollster, calls this the "Lady Macbeth phase" of the Reagan presidency. That is, no amount of impassioned on such things as the budget deficits and budget cuts affecting the poor.

As Mr. Hart says, one of the most intriguing political questions before the country is why this election is not a runaway for Mr. Reagan. Maybe it is, but he does not think so.

On the face of it, Mr. Reagan enters the campaign with tremedous advantages. Here is a non-paign with tremendous advantages. Here is a popular, charming, commanding figure who can make powerful campaign statements. He promised to bring the inflation rate down dramatically, and he did. He promised to make America stronger militarily, and he did. He promised to reduce unem-ployment, and he did. So where is he vulnerable?

His vulnerability lies in the impression, which he inforced last week, that he is extreme, that he is rigid, that he is unwilling to accept responsibility for mistakes and especially that he refuses to entertain any possibility that people have been unfairly hurt by his policies.

And if his campaign appearances seem too strident and he comes across as needlessly intransigent, Mr. Reagan runs the risk of seeming locked into stubbornness. It is there that the question of age intrudes. This has nothing to do with his physical condition, which is obviously superb. It has to do with his attitudes and cast of mind.

Whether these are enough to cause the voters to reject him, no one can say at this point. But they do suggest that Ronald Reagan, the genial president, is a better bet to remain in the White House than Ronald Reagan, the unregenerate candidate. The Washington Post.

Behind the Tax Talk, a Passionate Debate on Class By George F. Will

WASHINGTON — The fun started in San Francisco, when Walter Mondale promised to raise taxes and added, clairvoyantly, that Ronald Reagan, if re-elected, will raise taxes. Five days later, asked at a news conference if he was prepared to "flatly rule out the possibility of seeking a tax increase next year," Mr. Reagan said "yes," no doubt causing folks at his Office of Management and Budget to say "Arrrigh!"

Good arithmetic can be bad politics. The budget office people, who take arithmetic seriously, have worn their fingers to stumps producing ever more colorful and hair-curling charts and graphs in futile attempts to convince the president that he can-not get there from here. That is, he cannot get to a balanced budget with the existing revenue system. They say: When we program computers with economic growth assumptions with economic growth assumptions radical enough to produce a projection of a balanced budget, with no expenditures." But he would do that new taxes, the computers giggle.

But the whirring of computers is being drowned out by the noise of gauntlets being thrown down with "thumps!" audible all the way to Key West. Mr. Mondale threw one in San Francisco, but Mr. Reagan threw one last January in his State of the Union address. That address is remembered primarily for its observation about America's posture ("standing tall").

However, it contained two sentences that were a pre-emptive strike on the "fairness" issue: "Simple fairness dictates government must not raise taxes on families struggling to pay their bills. The root of the prob-lem is that government's share is be sufficiently at ease with the Enmore than we can afford if we are to have a sound economy."

Democrats would have to have anforgo demanding:
O.K., Great Communicator, communicate the cuts you plan - bear-tional. So either you plan to cut budget-cutting, government has been entitlements and discretionary cut as much as is compatible with its spending — particulars, please — or you have a tax-increase plan hidden in a pumpkin at Camp David."

Ironically, Mr. Mondale's promise of tax increases pleases those conser-vatives whose four-word formula for universal happiness is "Let Reagan Be Reagan." That is, Mr. Mondale's promise provokes Mr. Reagan to can-ter off in the opposite direction. At his news conference, Mr. Reagan slammed a door that may have to be opened next year, the door to increased taxes. But he slammed it so hard it bounced opened a bit. His news conference answer had a structure that was Eisenhowerean in its informality — and its artfulness. He said he would "look at the tax

only if "after all our best efforts" at irreducible "responsibilities," and a deficit remains. But such a moment is a long way away. And eagle-eyed conservatives may see that the door is ajar, and may nail it shut in the party platform. Meanwhile, Mr. Mondale's cry of "particulars, please" is made of India rubber and will bounce back at him. His "new realism" does not extend to specifying who will pay those new taxes. If, when pressed, he says "big corporations" and "the rich," arithmetic will rear its ugly head. Americans know, intuitively, that corporations do not pay taxes, they collect taxes, passing along the costs. Ameri-cans also know that serious revenues can only come from where most of the money is: the middle class. Mr. Reagan's idea that economic growth and spending cuts will balance the budget may be the most dangerous sort of myth; one that is sincerely believed. But it is no more implausible, and considerably less cynical, than the suggestion that the budget can be balanced by putting the Pentagon and country-club members through a winger.

This campaign, rolling at a remarkable clip for high summer, is becoming passionate because it is about class. The class struggle is never pretty and rarely has been as confusing as at present. Both parties claim to rep-. resent the downtrodden and identify the downtrodden not as the proletariat but as the middle class.

A young Democratic professional called from the convention to get his father's assessment of things. The fa-ther, a blue-collar worker in the Northeast, said this: "The Democratic Party has been good to me — Social Security, G.I. Bill, student loans. The Democratic Party made me middle class. But perhaps Reagan will keep me middle class.

Russian women compete for space at counter of Moscow's GUM department store

Paper Says Woman's Place Is in the Dacha

MOSCOW - The ideal Soviet woman is the one who can sew a button and peel a potato and generally respects the "stronger sex," according to a Leningrad psychologist.

The true strength of a woman lies not in her physical strength but in the weakness of her sex." the psychologist, V. Garbuzov, wrote in the official Soviet trade union newspaper Trud.

"By her tenderness, her pure female tact, her delicacy, she first wins the heart of her father, then husband," he said. Boys and girls are meant to be different, Mr.

"Giving a girl an apron as a present before she is given a Sunday dress instills in her the skill of housekeeping, the skill and taste for this eternal female cause," he said.

A mother must teach by example, acting and dressing properly, he said. Her daughter must learn the role of mother by caring for dolls, then pets and then younger children. "Before she goes to school she can already sew on a button, iron a hankerchief, peel a potato," the article said about a properly raised girl.

"A rough, coarse girl will inevitably turn into a rough, coarse woman. To prevent this happening, a girl must from her earliest years be prepared for

The article appeared as the latest Soviet hero, the cosmonaut, Svetlana Savitskaya, returned to Earth after becoming the first woman to walk in space. Ms. Savitskaya and two male cosmonauts landed their Soyuz T-12 Sunday in central Asia. In the Soviet battle of the sexes, it was clear whose side Mr. Garbuzov took.

her noble designation of woman, wife, mother."

"There is yet another thing that a daughter must be taught," the Trud article said, "to respect the stronger sex . . . in the form of a specific boy, youth or man for his personal qualities."

Mr. Garbuzov expressed alarm at a survey that showed Soviet women did not respect their men. He put the blame squarely on the women, who have outnumbered men through most of the century due to deaths in war and revolution.

"I am afraid that this is the fault of the female half of the family, constantly branding sons, brothers, husbands etc. as stupid, unfaithful, drunks,"

Women are making a terrible mistake, the article said, warning that they might end up divorced and lonely. "What could be more bitter for a woman?" Although women officially enjoy full equality. they are often blamed in the government-controlled press for social problems such as high divorce rates and troubled children.

Soviet Dusts Off Russophobia Charge In Counterattack on Reagan Policies

By Dusko Doder Washington Post Service

MOSCOW - Soviet officials have begun to mobilize Russian public opinion against what they charge is a new campaign of Russophobia in the West.

After several years of internal debate about Moscow's relationship to the West, occasioned by the Reagan administration's "evil empire" rhetoric and military buildup, gument that was advanced in its clearest form last week by Sergei Tikhvinski, a senior diplomat and historian.

The argument, in Mr. Tikhvinsu's words, holds that "Russophonia has become a main trend of contemporary anti-communism." hat "the entire activity of Amerian diplomacy is centered on atempts to isolate Western countries rom the Soviet Union" and that his is done by inciting hatred against the Russians by describing hem as "barbarians" and an "innerently violent" people who pose 1 permanent military threat to the

U.S. Trying to Raise Hospital Standards Critics Say Program, Aimed at Eliminating 'Avoidable' Deaths, Is Unrealistic

By Joel Brinkley

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The federal government has set up a program intended to force doctors and hospitals to eliminate "avoidable" deaths and substandard care. The American Hospital Association and other national medical organizations sav it is unrealistic.

The program is part of the government's efforts to reduce Medicare expenses. It calls for federally British sources said they regarded Mr. Deng as China's major Medicare spending in most states strategist on Hong Kong, which is to sign contracts with the Department of Health and Human Services. The contracts require them to assure that doctors and hospitals reduce unnecessary deaths by specific numbers in the next two years. Unnecessary deaths, as defined by the government, are those that could have been avoided through proper treatment. Officials of the Health and Human Services Department say the numerical goals are based on studies in each state that have shown how many hospital patients may have died unnecessarily or encountered complications that could have been avoided. The studies have never been made public but the contracts provide the first glimpse of their findings.

The new program applies only to Medicare patients but its effects would probably be felt in the care of most hospital patients.

Medicare is the federal medical insurance program for the elderly. The review agencies, called Pro-fessional Review Organizations, or

The American Medical Peer Review Association, which represents the review agencies, and the American Hospital Association say the new goals are based on unreliable data and will be difficult to meet. The new contract for Kentucky, for example, requires the review agency "to reduce the number of deaths which occur in Kentucky pospitals with the principal diagnosis of heart attack by 20 percent by October 31, 1985." Mississippi's new contract says the agency must ensure that the state's hospitals perform 35 fewer "avoidable above-the-knee and below-the-knee amputations" in the Tennessee's agency must reduce by 25 percent, from 173 to 130, the incidence of deaths attributed to one type of pulmonary embolism, an obstruction of the pulmonar artery, usually by a blood clot.

And West Virginia's agency must "reduce by 1.631 the number of unnecessary hospital readmissions resulting from substandard care provided during prior admis-

The review agencies are to en courage the changes by threatening to withhold Medicare payments to doctors and hospitals.

If the objectives are not met, the government can refuse to pay the review agencies, or it can renegotiate their contracts with another agency. At present, all the review agencies are run by doctors. But the law says that if medical groups are unable to meet the objectives, insurance companies would be per-mitted to bid for the contracts. That prospect is anathema to the medical community.

Andrew Webber, executive vice president of the American Medical Peer Review Association, said the goals might not be realistic.

The silver medal in the latter, originally awarded to Xu's teammate Wang Yifu, was taken away after Sweden's Ragnar Skanaker lodged a successful protest, which gave him one additional point — lifting him out of a tie at 564 with Wang. Wang won the bronze.

Japan topped China, 15-9, 15-9, 15-8, in their volleyball meeting. Haiying Lin of China, who led after the first round of the women's free pistol event, did not shoot as well in the second, losing to Austrahan Patricia Drench in a shootout for the bronze. The Chinese men were trounced

U.S. Cyclist Carpenter Closes With a Rush

By George Vecsey
New York Times Service

MISSION VIEJO, California - She had prepared all year for the race, knowing it would be her last, but with 50 meters left, she was coming up short on the 79-kilometer road race. Connie Carpenter was a few centimeters behind Rebecca Twigg, all the difference between gold and silver.

With a furious thrust of her bicycle at Sunday's finish line, Carpenter caught her younger rival to win the first U.S. cycling medal since 1912, in the first Olympic cycling race for women.

A long and hot afternoon later, Alexi Grewal of the United States, who was nearly disqualified from the Summer Games last week because of a doping discrepancy, surged past Steve Baner of Canada for the second U.S. gold medal of the day, in the men's 190kilometer road race.

The two narrow finishes stirred up the tens of thousands sun-baked fans enjoying one of the few free events in these high-priced Games. There were chants of "U.S.A." as the United States continues to prove it has come of age in one of the world's most popular Just last week, Greg LeMond finished third in the Tour de France, the best finish ever by an American, and Marianne Martin won the women's version of the tour. Many of the fans standing around the course did not care which woman won the first women's cycling race in Olympic history. In the final stretch, Carpenter, 27 and rail thin, and Twigg, 21 and compact, pulled ahead of the gallant band of six riders that mile laps. At the end, it all depended on the best last move. They have been dogging each other all year, portrayed as icy rivals, although Carpenter said Sunday that "the press created that" and Twigg said: "We have never known each before this. It was not a day for aquatics, at least right here, but rather a day for the further acknowledgement that women are really built for longer, harder races than sports officials ever believed. On Saturday, the first 26-mile marathon for women will be run through the streets of Los Angeles.

"Pedal 4 a Medal," said a banner hanging "Go for the Gold," said a banner from a Twigg is a precocious young rider from Seattle who has pointed toward cycling since she was an infant. Carpenter, married to Davis Phinney, the fifth-place finisher in Sunday's men's race, switched from Olympic speed skating to cycling as an adult and had let it be known this would be her last race so she can help her 25-year-old husband "reach his cycling potential."

Her last race evolved into a six-woman pack. Because of the heavy wind resistance, few bicycle riders can stay in front for long. They need either a full team of "domestiques," as in stage races like the Tour de France, to maneuver for them, or they need short spurts to the front, followed by rest periods at somebody's rear wheel.

Connie Carpenter ... This is what it looks like, guys.'

The six riders included Sandra Schumacher of West Germany, who would finish third, Unni Larsen of Norway who would finish fourth, Maria Canins of Italy, a 35year-old mother of two who would pick herself up after a nasty spill and linish fifth, and Jeannie Longo of France, who would walk her bike across after her chain broke in the final sprint.

Only the two U.S. women had any possibil-Only the two U.S. women had any possionity of riding in concert in the pack. "Connie told me during the week that if we didn't win the gold, we'd have to crawl out of here. It's a big responsibility," Twigg said later.

They did nothing to hurt each other for much of the race, and in the fourth lap, Twigg broke away for a lead for over 90 seconds, a hard push that Carpenter said "was too soon, I thought.

They all knew it would come down to a final sprint. Carpenter recalled later: "I was still sixth with half a lap to go. I wanted to make a sprint but I didn't want to go too soon. Maria went first with about 500 meters. Sandra was on her rear tire. I was still third or fourth. I waited til 200 meters because I had done some motor-paced sprints and I knew I could handle it. But Rebecca was ahead of me

"I knew it was going to be close, so to gain ground, I threw my bike at the end. It gave me an advantage." Asked to define "throwing a bike," Carpenter said: "In a close sprint, you can push your bike with your body, move it a foot forward. My husband is good at it. It's like learning into the tape for a runner, a calculated move. It was a shot I could only take one

Twigg wasn't sure the last little thrust helped. "I saw somebody coming and I was glad it was Connie," she said. "I think she might have caught me anyway even without throwing her bike."

Carpenter said: "Everything I have done this last year was cool and calculated for this race, to ride the best race of my life. This is it, the last bike race of my life." After receiving her medal, she visited the men's quarters, where her husband and three other Americans were preparing for their "I showed them the medal and I said, This is what it looks like, guys."

She did not feel she had to make up for the 72-year drought in cycling medals because "women haven't competed until today."
"Given the chance," she said, "we would have won medals before this, maybe. The men had a chance."

Record Low Prices Spark New Gold and Silver Rush

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

New York Times Service EW YORK -According to experienced bullion dealers, gold bugs view the world in two ways: One, an improving economy can only lead to a resurgence of inflation followed by economic and social chaos. Two, if conditions are not good, then the economy can only get worse with the same results. Thus, the recent steady stream of positive economic news has only reinforced the first of their two views. and that was reflected in the gold market last week.

On Friday, bullion prices traded at a two-year low of $332 an ounce, which also was the life-of-contract low of the spot August gold futures delivery on the Comex in New York. For many gold bugs and new speculators, that was happy news. When Comex closed, spot gold was at $342, up $8.20 on the day and up $2 on the week. Bullion coin dealers and banks offering certificates of deposit in the metal were besieged by small and not-so-anything like this since the boom of late small buyers. 1979, early 1980." Jeffrey A. Volk, vice president and managing director of Citibank's Precious Metals Service, which is a major dealer in bullion worldwide, observed Friday: "When gold prices drop, demand soars and vice versa. In early June, for example, gold was sliding from around $400 an ounce and our sales of bullion certificates were sluggish. But early this month, when the gold market really took a dive, our business jumped. Volume thus far in July is running 300 percent above the June level. Normally, July and August are dead months in the global bullion market.

"We haven't seen

The certificate buyers, Mr. Volk said, were equally represented by Citibank's three main groups of precious-metals investors, its institutional, "high net worth" and "retail" customers of more modest means. "These three groups, as opposed to the in-and-out gold and silver traders, always take the long-term view," he said. James P. Hildebrandt, senior vice president of Deak-Perera.

the largest bullion coin dealer, noted as he and other executives helped harried clerks wait on customers and take orders over the telephone at company headquarters in lower Manhattan: "We haven't seen anything like this since the boom days of late 1979 and early 1980. I don't have precise figures, but we estimate that July sales of bullion coins and bars must be up 200 to 300 percent from June and way above what we had in previous months."

Mr. Hildebrandt pointed out, however, that the buying of silver, mostly in bar form, has been much greater than sales of gold, which he attributed to the fact that silver prices have dropped more sharply than gold prices have. The Comex spot August silver futures closed last Friday at $7.05 an ounce, down 28 cents on the week and $1.33 for the month to date.

NOTHER example of the latest gold and silver rush sparked A by the decline in prices was provided by Jeffrey A. Nichols, an authority on the precious-metals market. "The investments in gold-oriented domestic mutual funds are always a good indicator." Mr. Nichols said. "At the end of 1983, these funds had total assets of roughly $900 million. On March 31, the latest reports we have show the total assets of these funds at just over $2 billion. The first quarter of this year was not a good one for precious metals, so we expect that the numbers will be bigger for the second quarter because the precious-metals markets were even worse then "

Because the outlook for precious metals remains poor, at least for the near term, a new kind of precious metals mutual fund has been organized by Mr. Nichols, until recently head of the precious-metals department at Goldman, Sachs & Co., and Thomas lson Lufkin &

The American Precious Metals Advisors fund is not entirely gold-oriented, as are most such mutual funds. As Mr. Nichols explained: "While all precious metals generally follow the same trend, they don't do so at the same rate. For example, the recent decline in silver has been much sharper, in percentage terms, than in gold or the platinum family of metals. In fact, platinum, at $329 an ounce today, is again selling at a discount to gold."

Consequently, he thinks that arbitraging and spreading between the precious metals could provide an opportunity for more profit than just investments in gold bullion or domestic or foreign gold shares, which is what most precious-metals mutual funds do.

Dollar Sets Records In Europe

Volcker Testimony Has Little Effect

LONDON - The dollar, propelled largely by continued expec-tations of high U.S. interest rates, closed Monday at new record highs against the Swiss, French, Italian and Spanish currencies.

Gold prices moved up around $3 dollars an ounce, but failed to get back over $340 dollars after last week's sharp fall.

Currency dealers said trading was quiet despite the dollar's strong advance.

It was only temporarily reined when the U.S. Federal Reserve Board chairman, Paul A. Volcker, reiterated in Washington his view that the growth of the U.S. economy will soon moderate.

"The market took Volcker's remarks as a hint at declining Ameri-can interest rates," said one dealer of Mr. Volcker's testimony to the Economic Committee of the U.S.

"But basically, the market re-mains convinced that even a slight decline in interest rates won't undermine the dollar's general strength."

In Zurich, the dollar rose to a record 2.4640 Swiss francs, then declined slightly to close at 2.4623,

Ameritech Takes a Surprising Lead Among Spun-off AT&T Companies

By Steven Greenhouse

NEW YORK - When seven regional telephone companies were about to be broken away from American Telephone & Telegraph Co., many investment analysts predicted that Ameritech, the Chicago-based regional, would bring up the rear in the race among the

Wall Street's handicappers cited two reasons for their dour predictions about Ameritech: it is in one of the slowest-growing regions of the United States in terms of population, and its service area includes the Middle West's Rust Belt and its array of declining

But once the regionals went into business last Ian 1 Ameritech surprised everyone by sprinting out in front of its sister companies. In its first two quarters, Ameritech's return on equity was the highest of the regional companies. It was the first regional to market cellular mobile telephones, and many industry analysts say, it has achieved the lowest cost per telephone line.

"In terms of return on investment, they've been the stellar performer," said Audrey L. Stevoff, an analyst with Duff & Phelps, a Chicago-based securities firm. They've done a better job in controlling costs than the others. They recognize this is a slower-growing area, so they bit the bullet early and cut costs." Nevertheless, some analysts contend that it is only a matter of time before it falls back into the pack.

Its dazzling performance might cause the rate-setting commissions in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana and Ohio, the states it serves, to reduce telephone rates — and company profits — on the ground that Ameritech is getting too high a return on Probably the biggest fear, however, is that compa-

Officials at Ameritech, which is short for American Information Technologies Corp., say they have reached the front of the pack the old-fashioned way. Murdoch Plans Offer to St. Regis Shareholders

NEW YORK - Rupert Murdoch, whose bid for control of St. Regis Corp. was rejected by the forest products company last week. said Monday that he intends to take the offer directly to St. Regis shareholders.

Mr. Murdoch's News International PLC said it plans to make an offer to shareholders for 50.1 percent of St. Regis stock within five business days.

In a related development, St. Regis asked the New York Stock Exchange not to open trading in its shares pending an announcement.
In the meantime, Carol Olwert, a St. Regis spokeswoman, said her company would not respond to Mr.

Murdoch's latest plans.
The value of Mr. Murdoch's bid would be determined by whether St. Regis completed its previously announced plan to purchase Colonial Penn Group Inc., an insurance company, in a $585-million stock and cash transaction. News International said it would offer $55 a share in cash for each St. Regis share sought if the Colonial Penn acquisition was not completed. Otherwise, the offer would be $47 a share in cash.

The offer would be valued at about $890 million under either offer, because of an increase in St. Regis stock outstanding under the Colonial Penn transaction. There now are about 36 million St. Regis shares outstanding, including dif-ferent series of preferred stock that is convertible into common stock. Mr. Murdoch currently controls 1.8 million shares of St. Regis common stock.

Mr. Murdoch said he currently had no plan to purchase more than 50.1 percent of St. Regis stock. But he said that if the St. Regis directors supported his bid, he would negotiate an agreement to buy the remaining stock and complete a merger.
Mr. Murdoch, a publisher who owns newspapers and other prop-erties in Britain, Australia and the United States, had earlier directly approached the company with an offer of $52 a share for 50.1 percent of the stock. In turning down that bid last week, St. Regis directors said the offer was not in the best interests of the company or its shareholders. News International noted that

Banco Filipino Set to Reopen

The Associated Press MANILA - The largest savings bank in the Philippines, Banco Filipino, is set to reopen Wednesday after a tense nine day struggle with the country's central bank for emergency funds to meet a growing demand for withdrawls.

Under orders from President Ferdinand E. Marcos, the central bank granted to Banco Filipino cash loans worth up to $167 million late last week.

Many commercial bankers here remain nervous of low public confidence in the banking system, and more than a dozen banks here took out advertisements in major newspapers to reassure their depositors. Most bankers blamed Banco's crisis on inflation, de valuations of the peso and the slow release of cash by the central bank, which is under pressure to reduce the money sup-

Bank AG said partial operating profit for the first half of 1984 dropped 12 percent from the record 1983 period, to 508.3 million Dentsche marks ($176.5 million) from 579.1 million DM.

A company spokesman said that Dresduer — West Germany's second largest bank - had expected an even sharper drop.

Last year, Dresdner's partial operating profit, which excludes results from trading on securities, currency and precious metals, rose

Regent Hotels Buy London Dorchester

LONDON - The Hong Kong-based Regent Interna-tional Hotels announced Monday the acquisition of the Dorchester in London from a group of Middle Eastern investors. The price for the 290-room hotel was not disclosed, but sources close to the transaction put it at around £40 million ($52 million), or about 10 times annual profit. The 53-year-old hotel changed hands in 1976 for £9.5 million. Regent's chair-man, Robert H. Burns, said that

The results were far more favor-FRANKFURT - Dresdner able than we had expected," said Walter Vielmetter, a Dresdner spokesman. "We managed to increase overall volume by 4.4 percent compared with a year earlier, largely as a result of persistently strong demand for credit from private domestic clients."

> The bank reported that partial operating income, which includes interest income plus fee income af-ter deductions of personnel and running costs, was down as a result of higher personnel costs and lower revenue from interest received. The bank said that income from fees grew 4.1 percent from 394 million DM to 410 million DM. Personnel and administrative costs rose 2.5 percent to 1.21 billion DM, from 1.18 billion DM, while Germany and interest income fell 3.8 percent to pomic outlook.

The bank said that fee income grew 4.1 percent to 410 million DM from 394 million DM.

Mr. Vielmetter said the bank's average interest-rate margin, the difference between the interest rate paid and the interest rate received, fell as expected to 2.7 percentage points compared with an average 2.9 points for 1983.

The spokesman said that the bank is preparing to increase provisions against losses and risks for its overseas lending operations above last year's levels, which amounted to some 1 billion DML

BELING - The U.S. aviation industry is in line for perhaps bil-lions of dollars in sales to China before the decade's end but the European competition will be tough, leaders of a U.S. aerospace delegation said here last week after three days of talks.

Olin L. Wethington, U.S. deputy undersecretary of commerce for international trade, said Chinese officials told the group that they want to buy large numbers of advanced jetliners, medium-distance aircraft and commuter planes from the United States. They also want to enter into production and assembly agreements.

This percentage gain is in line with those for some other regional companies and helps explain why Ameritech management announced Thursday that it is buying back 500,000 of its shares because it believes its stock is undervalued.

Contrary to predictions, Ameritech's location in a mature region has helped it because it has not had to spend millions on laying new lines to distant new homes. Also defying predictions, being in a highly cyclical manufacturing region has been beneficial because the United States is in the healthy part of the cycle. In the next recession, however, this cyclicality could soon, however, the cyclicality could sion, however, tms eyementy solves slow Ameritech more than the oth-

In addition, Ameritech officials are pushing harder than most re-trouble from competitors and public service commissions.

For example, it is seeking to expand its publishing business to more than telephone directories and is working with a real-estate developer to install modern communications systems in buildings, even beyond its five-state area.

Mr. Springer, the vice chairman, said this "can take the pressure off the operating telephone companies to the extent the other activities do well. This can help keep basic telephone rates low."

However, he added, if regulators take the view that nonregulated business allows Ameritech too large a return on equity, "they'd take away the incentive to get into other businesses, and we'd just back away."

Ameritech is also selling 150 cellular mobile telephones a day in Chicago, 25 percent above expecta-tions, and is about to expand mobile telephone operations to Milwaukee, Detroit and Cincinnati.

Although analysts say cellular phones will not break even for three years, Mr. Springer said: "Our revenues today are over $8 billion, so if mobile phones become just 1 percent of that, that's $80 million. That's a big business."

THE SECOND SELF: Computers and the Human Spirit

By Sherry Turkle. 362 pp. $17.95. Simon & Schuster, 1230 Ave. of the Americas, New York, N.Y., 10020.

Reviewed by

Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

THERE are dozens of remarkable vignettes to consider in Sherry Turkle's "Second Self: Computers and the Human Spirit," and all they seem at first to share is their evidence of the surprisingly different ways that various people respond to computers. For instance, Jenny — a 6-year-old caught up in a debate among her playmates over whether an elec-tronic toy that seems to cheat can be considered "alive" — announces disdainfully, "To cheat you have to know you are cheating.

Knowing is part of cheating."

Tanya, a sixth-grader who is failing all her subjects despite her sophisticated sense of style and her passionate interest in language, learns to write almost immediately upon being introduced to a computer. It turns out that she simply found her childish handwriting too shameful Fessik a community handwriting too shameful. Frank, a computer-science major at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a devout Roman Catholic, believes that if God permits artificial intelligence to be achieved, a "soul" may well enter the machine and use it 'as its 'receptacle' in this universe."

But for all the fascinating results of these and other surveys undertaken by Professor Turkle, there are even better reasons why "The Second Self" is more than just another routine study of the cultural impact of the computer revolution and its prospects for eventually fabricating intelligence. These have to do with the author's approach to her subject, which combines rigorous academic discipline with a sympathetic, even playful, imagination.

Sherry Turkie holds doctorates in sociology and psychology from Harvard, and is an associate professor in MIT's program in science. technology and society. To write "The Second Self," she spent six years studying and interviewing everyone from children undergoing their first encounters with computers, to lonely adolescents fixated on video games, to those members of MIT's community who are most obsessively involved with advancing the leading edge of computer technology.

Because she proceeds so methodically viewing her youngsters according to Jean Piaget's model of childhood development, and judging her adults in the light of the current philosophical issues surrounding artificial intelligence - she is able to highlight the significant attributes of her disparate subjects. Not all that different are the self-styled misfits dreaming up variations of Pac-Man and Space Invaders, and the hackers and philosophers meditating on the patterns of Douglas Hofstadter's influential study. "Godel, Escher, Bach: An Eternal Golden Braid."

While the theorists squabble over the relative pertinence of Lovelace patterns and the phenomenon of emergence or whether com-puters can ever be designed to be as intelligent as human beings, the children scratch their heads and wonder if the tic-tac-toe machine knows that it is cheating. It is left to Jenny to point out that if the thinking process is intelligent, then whatever is undergoing the process must also be intelligent. That, after all, remains the gist of the famous Turing test of artificial intelligence, which proposed that if, in a fair test, a reasonable person could not distinguish between the thinking of a person and a machine, then there is no difference between inu-man intelligence and artificial intelligence. Turkel sees both Freudian theory and computers as popular metaphors for human behavor, with the former now giving way to the latter in the public mind.

It is apt, she believes, that the computational metaphor should be supplanting the psychoan-alytic one, with people increasingly talking about themselves as needing "reprogramming" instead of attributing their behavior to "uncon-scious drives," as they once were inclined to do.

The computer has come along at a time when our prevailing complaint is loneliness accompanied by fear of intimacy. It is precisely to this neurotic condition that computers, with their ambiguous companionship, are so ideally

Is this a good thing or a danger? As her many illustrations show, it is not necessarily either. Some people are liberated by their contact; others get stuck. "Computers are not good or bad; they are powerful," Turkle concludes, having earned by the strength of her examples a right to such understatement.

And having presented with extraordinary clarity both sides of the debate on the possibili-ty of achieving artificial intelligence, she ends up her brilliant and challenging discussion on a note of neutrality. What is significant now, she believes, is that a fascination with our machine-like attributes that has come in the wake of the computer revolution has taken the place of our fixation on sexuality that followed the Freudian revolution.

WASHINGTON — The stage VV managers in charge of the Re-publican National Convention in Dallas are in a tizzy. How do you keep the TV public's attention for four days when the nominations of the president and his vice president are a sure thing?

The Associated Press NEW YORK - The corner of 49th Street and Broadway in mid-town Manhatian has been named "Jack Dempsey Corner" to bonor the heavyweight boxing champion who owned a restaurant nearby. Dempsey, who died in 1983, won the heavyweight crown in 1919 and won 65 of his 70 career fights.

ed. "They all scream about the are they when we need them? I told the party honchos Dallas was a lousy place to hold our show." "Why do you need demonstrators?" I asked him. "Because we have to show some contrast between what's going on inside the hall and what's going on outside. How can our speakers attack the people demonstrating outside when there is nobody there? Couldn't you find any hardcore secular humanists willing to demonstrate against prayers in school?" the manager asked. "Most secular humanists are on vacation in August." "What about The National Organization of Women? Can't we get them to come to Dallas?"

"They said they were thinking about demonstrating at our con-vention, but concluded it would be a waste of time. They'd rather spend their energies making shirts for Gerry Ferraro."

"I promised ABC, CBS, and NBC there would be riots outside of the convention hall and the National Guard would be standing by. We haven't even come up with one Hispanic to protest the Simpson

"If you want my opinion," the assistant said, "I think there is a conspiracy amongst all the organizations who are against Reagan to boycott our convention. They figure if there is no turmoil everyone will watch an old movie on an independent channel, and no one will even see our candidates on the air."

"That very thought dawned on me," the stage manager said. "Well if they don't want to play that game we'll play it ourselves. Get me the Dallas chief of police.

The assistant dialed and handed the phone to the manager. "Chief, this is the convention planner. Listen, there is going to be a bearded gry outside the convention hall with a big Mondale button on his shirt holding a 'Get Out Of El Sal-vador' sign. When the TV cameras show up he's going to set fire to an American flag. You can arrest him, but tell your people not to beat up on him too much, because he's really my assistant and I'm going to need him to organize the show inside the hall."

Fumiko Enchi, Grande Dame of Japanese Novelists

By Christine Chapman

OKYO - "Pent-up emotions stay with women forever," said Fumiko Enchi. "Men can act and purge their feelings.

Fumiko Enchi is the grande dame of contemporary Japanese novelists. At 78, with more than 50 years of writing behind her, she has received all of the literary prizes and honors given to a writer in Japan.

But she looks like a small, sweet obasan, or grandmother, and talks like a liberated woman. She is both, and in her best work, like the novel "Onnazaka," translated into English as "The Waiting Years," she is also an artist. A master of the technique of novel and short story, Enchi describes the bedeviled lives of women who contain their emotions until age, or their bodies, betray them.

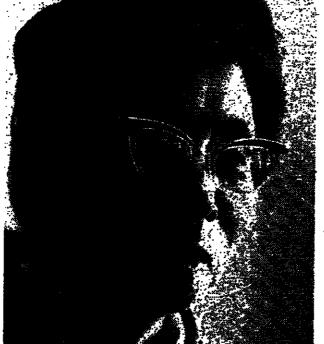

Years before feminist novels became common in the United States, Enchi wrote about women's sexuality and their oppression by men in Japan's patriarchal society. In 1957 she won the highest literary award, the Noma Prize, for "The Waiting Years," which John Bester translated for Kodansha in 1971. In 1983, "Masks," published by Alfred A. Knopf, was translated by Juliet Winters Carpenter. Both novels dig into the complexities of being a woman whose natural enemy

By Enchi's account she has published 300 short stories, 30 novels and 20 plays.

She is also known in Japan for the "Enchi Genji," a modern Jap-anese translation of Lady Mura-saki's 11th century "Tale of Genji" on which Enchi worked for six years. It was a labor of Enchi survived near-fatal bouts with cancer during the postwar years, and a fallow period as a writer because of her sickness. "The fact remains, I didn't die," she said tartiv.

Enchi, who usually appears in public in a kimono, sits in her living room wearing pink socks and a sweater over her western dress. It's a damp afternoon during the rainy season, but she is in good spirits, eager to talk about her writing and her subjects: women and men.

Enchi's prototype of a long-suf-fering wife is Tomo Shirakawa from "The Waiting Years," a nov-el she worked on for eight years. Enchi probed the mind of a traditional woman married for 49 years during the Meiji and Taisho periods. The novel gives a remarkable insight into the woman's thwarted passions as she loves a husband who humiliates Yukitomo Shirakawa, a wealthy and important government official, achieves a certain notoriety in Japanese literature as a man whose lust for women is equalled only by his arrogance. He sends his wife to Tokyo to select a concubine for him. As his career and his ego flourish, the marriage becomes sterile.

He adds a second concubine to the family compound. Eventually he begins a sexual relationship with his son's wife. His own wife,

'If you love your husband, it's a chore to live through life with him," she says recalling a Japanese proverb. "I was married for 40 years and I was not in love with him at all Marriage was an es-

The somewhat-rebellious daughter of a Japanese linguistics scholar, Fumi Enchi was born in the center of Tokyo in 1905. (She adapted Fumiko as her pen

Dropping out of the girls' high school attached to Japan Women's University, she began to study drama. Having been stimu-lated by her family's love of Kabuki, she wrote her first play before she was 23, making her debut as a playwright at the Tsukiji Lit-

Drama was the favorite form of literature in those days," she recalled, "But after my marriage, I realized life was more comp cated and drama was not the proper form to show it. Drama is limited to action and dialogue. The novel gave me more freedom for expression. I began writing novels and short stories when I was 27 or 28."

Before her marriage at 25 in 1930, when she was "eligible," as she puts it, she was caught up in the proletarian literary move-

"I belonged to the Communist organization, but since I loved my father very much, I didn't want to cause problems for him. I thought of breaking away from the family, but I didn't, I didn't seek a wealthy man to marry either. I novel wanted a scientist or a journalist." She married a journalist, Yo-shimatsu Enchi, a newspaper reporter who died 10 years ago. They had a daughter, now the 51year-old mother of four children and wife of a scientist. Enchi lives with them in her large house near the campus of Tokyo University.

For several years during the war and later Enchi could not write. In the war she lost her property to the bombing and then endured a slow recovery from cancer because of a shortage of medicine. However, in 1952 her novella "Himoji Tsukihi," or "Starving Days," won the Women Writers Prize, and Enchi began writing a long list of successful novels and short stories, including 1983's "Kiku Jido." In his essay "A Survey of Liter-ature in 1983," the critic Masaaki Kawanishi calls it a work of "mature mastery." "Even in old age," he writes, "Enchi's inner and outer worlds are liberated and free."

Enchi admits having made a good living by writing novels and stories for magazines and news-papers. This kind of serial writing is the usual method of publication in Japan for authors to reach a wide public. After appearing in the journals, the work is usually published in book form.

Although she is adept in using the story-within-a-story device and, in many of her novels, juxtaposing the bizarre with the real, she dismisses the idea of such conscious craftsmanship. "I can't plan a literary device at

"Yukio Mishima pointed out two aspects of my novels," she continued, mentioning a third contemporary whom she has out-lived. "He said 'Onnazaka' was a story of human ethics while 'Masks' was amoral. 'Masks' was my imagination, my illusions and passion," she asserted.

The outspoken Enchi has the spunky charm of her young heroines and the strong endurance of the older ones. In spite of a "bad leg and a bad eye," she would like to travel, she says, and plan a new

To Recall Book on Pope

A book about Pope John Paul II is fraudulent, contains quotes that are "not authentic" and will be pulled off the market, according to one of its publishers. "I have no other choice, the book is a disaster," said Julian M. Snyder, president of Richardson & Snyder, which published "God's Broker" by Antoni Gronowicz last April. Snyder plans to sue for the $60,000 advance paid the author and will dissolve his joint publishing ven-ture with Stewart Richardson, who had acquired the book. But Richardson said Snyder "doesn't have any right to recall the book" and said he plans to sue Sayder. The book purports to be the life of the pope as told in his own words and in the reminiscences of friends. It quotes the pope directly on a variety of subjects. An escape artist billed the new Hondini was hospitalized with burns in London after failing to free himself of handcuffs and chains while surrounded by bales of blazing straw. Dave Danzig, a member of a circus troupe called the "Grand Theater of Lemmings," trussed himself up Sunday during a performance in Battersea Park, lit the hay and then tried to extricate himself. A hospital spokesman said himself. A hospital spokesman said his injuries were not serious.

A London woman with a lifelong ambition to make a parachute jump chickened out Sunday, then broke her arm in a two-foot (0.6meter) fall while showing friends ... how she should have done it. After a day's training, Jacqui Miranda, 38, took to the skies from an airstrip at Badminton in southwest England. At 2,000 feet, she became too nervous to make the jump and climbed back into the aircraft. The mishap, Miranda said, happened several hours later when she was demonstrating parachute techniques to friends by jumping off a children's climbing frame.

Assails Amnesty In Letter

Solidarity

WARSAW - A leader of the Solidarity underground, who dis-appeared after his release from prison under a government amnesty, has met with a leader of the union's underground movement, a communiqué signed by both men said Tuesday.

The communiqué, dated July 29 and given to Western media organizations Tuesday, said Wladislaw Frasyniuk, who was released from Leczyca prison Friday, had met with Zbigniew Bujak. Mr. Frasyniuk, a former Solidarity chairman in southwestern Poland, failed to return to his home in Wroclaw after his release

The communique said Mr. Fra-syniuk had tricked security police and made his way to Warsaw to meet Mr. Bujak, one of the most wanted underground Solidarity leaders, who has been in hiding for two and a half years.

It said, "Polish society, Solidarity militants, the Roman Catholic Church and the West" had pressured the country's Communist government into declaring an amnesty for 652 political prisoners 21. "This measure, which could have marked an important step in Polish life, is aimed at serving the current interests of power, the communiqué said.

The communique called for the release of Bogdan Lis, a jailed underground Solidarity leader, and his colleague, Piotr Mieszewski, ficity of language to be included in were arrested in June and charged with treason, which is not covered under the amnesty.

Argentina Loses Ground In Fight on Rights Cases

By Jackson Diehl

BUENOS AIRES - Seven months after President Raul Alfonsin of Argentina ordered courts martial for military commanders involved in illegal arrests, torture and killing of prisoners, his efforts to resolve a painful legacy of political violence appear to be in danger of breaking down.

The military's supreme council failed in July to complete on dead-line the courts martial of nine former military junta leaders accused by the civilian government of homicide, torture and other crimes. Regulations require the council to act within 180 days, but a 30-day extension has been granted.

More than 400 other cases of human rights violations, brought in most instances by private citizens, and outside the government are criticizing the delays and have pressed for the transfer of the trials to civilian judges. At the same time. there is evidence of unrest among military officers who fear that Mr. Alfonsin's policy of shielding most of their ranks from suits and punishment is ineffective.

Some officials are urging Mr. Alfonsin to propose an amnesty law automatically exempting most junior officers from punishment, a government source said. A general amnesty decreed by the military last year was annulled days after Mr. Alfonsin took office.

Although amnesty laws have been a traditional measure of conciliation after military governments were replaced in Argentina and other Latin American countries, Mr. Alfonsin has been committed to applying a system of justice to the abuses of both the military and cratic leaders, his position on El

"Nothing has been resolved," said Emilio Mignone, head of the Center for Legal and Social Studies, a rights group representing doz-ens of victims and their families in court cases. Mr. Mignone and military sources predicted that Argentina's democracy could be shaken within the next several months by the eruption of a crisis over the handling of rights cases.

Although overshadowed recently by Argentina's economic crisis and foreign debt, the legacy of military repression has been described by many Argentine leaders as the greatest obstacle to the consolidation of democracy.

in recent weeks, both the depth of the country's wounds and the potential for conflict have been illustrated by the National Commission on the Disappeared, the group named by Mr. Alfonsin to investigate the years of guerrilla activities by leftist groups and subsequent brutal repression by the military. Key Legislator Set to Approve Salvador Aid man of a House subcommittee that exerts major influence over foreign aid spending says he is now pre-pared to approve almost all of the military and economic assistance sought by the Reagan administration for El Salvador next year.

By Philip Taubman New York Times Servic WASHINGTON -- The chair-

There were indications that the decision on Monday by the chairman. Representative Clarence D. Long, a Maryland Democrat, signaled a significant shift in congressional sentiment since the election of Jose Napoleon Duarte as president of El Salvador in May.

In the past, Mr. Long and the panel he heads, the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, have made deep cuts in foreign aid levels for El Salvador. Their actions have generally been accepted by Congress and have been central to the long-standing dispute between the White House and Congress over policy in El Salvador.

Mr. Long said he decided to support most of the administration's aid request after meeting with Mr. Duarte last week in Washington.

"He persuaded me he's caught between the radical left and the radical right and he needs some support." Mr. Long said in an in-terview. He added, "I think Duarte's a very straightforward guy and I want to give him a able support. Last week, the majority leader. James C. Wright Jr., Democrat of Texas, said Congress should approve additional aid to El Salvador to help Mr. Duarte establish democratic rule.

Mr. Long said $126 million would sustain military aid at the same level approved by Congress in 1984. Congress has approved year, almost half of it in the form of a supplemental appropriation.

The congressman said he continued to oppose a second supplemen-tal increase for 1984 of $116 million. This White House request, which was rejected by the House Appropriations Committee last week, is expected to be revived by Republicans when the House begins debate on an omnibus supplemental appropriation bill this week. Lawmakers said it would likely be defeated.

[L. Craig Johnstone, deputy assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, said Tuesday he was "pleased that there is a growing bipartisan consensus over the 1985 spending. But he added that the administration will make a full effort to obtain all the money that it requested for 1984." The Associated Press reported.]

Congress has approved $120 million in economic assistance for El Salvador this year. The Appropriations Committee approved an addi-tional $20 million last week as part of the supplemental appropriation

Mr. Long said he thought a mod-est increase in economic aid and the maintenance of military support were justified by Mr. Duarte's efforts to reform the Salvadoran armed forces and end human rights abuses. "Duarte has gotten rid of a lot of bad officers, he's set up commissions to investigate corruption and he's trying to crack down on the death squads," he said.

Mr. Long's position seemed to go far to fulfill administration hopes that the election of Mr.

Japanese Cabinet Places 7% Limit On Increases in Defense Spending

By Clyde Haberman

New York Times Service TOKYO — Japan's cabinet, caught between military and fiscal pressures, approved a budget Tuesday limiting increases in defense spending next year to 7 percent The action means that Japan will continue its pattern in recent years of steadily increasing its military budget, but falling short, in the view of many experts, of meeting long-range detense goals.

Japanese officials said that a 7 percent increase is probably the best that the Defense Agency could have hoped for, given an austerity program that will produce an overall budget of virtually no growth for a fourth straight year. Some government agencies anticipate deep cuts.

The actual budget will not be adopted until December, and changes are certain. If the past is a guide, Japanese defense spending will ultimately rise by somewhat less than the 7 percent ceiling imposed Tuesday.

For the last few years the Finance Ministry has preached austerity in hopes of arresting a rising national debt, which amounted last year to 39 percent of the gross national product. However, members of the ruling Liberal Democrance Party have begun to chafe over the stringency, and are looking for more public works spending in behalf of their constituents. Their dissatisfaction, some polit-

For First Time, White Male Worker Is in Minority of U.S. Labor Force

New York Times Service

NEW YORK - For the first time, the white male prototype of the American worker since the beginning of the nation no longer makes up the majority of the U.S. work force.

In 1983, white male workers fell to 49.8 percent of the work force, from 50 percent in 1982. This trend has continued, and by June 1984 white male workers had fallen to 49.3 percent of the work force.

In 1954, white males made up 62.5 percent of the work force. The trend demonstrates a "different world" in American work, home and family, according to Samuel M. Ehrenhalt, the Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics commissioner for the New York region.

In the distance, perhaps a mile and a half away on the other side of the lake, an Iranian observation post can be seen clearly through binoculars. Despite the occasional rumble of distant artillery fire, there has been no shooting here for days or any attempt by Iran to re-infiltrate the marshes, according to the local Kurdish commander who led the Iraqi counteroffensive in early March to retake this area.

Iraqi officials, from President Saddam Hussein on down, continue to echo U.S. military intelligence warnings that an Iranian offensive is imminent. But there is no sense of urgency among frontline Iraqi soldiers. Their officers seem to believe the Iranian Army and leadership are too paralyzed by internal squabbles to mount a major military operation.

In the February offensive, the Iranians came through the Hawizeh Marshes because it was in a gap between Iraq's Third and Fourth armies and largely without defenses. Several hundred lightly armed Iranihave set up two new commands, the East Basra and the East Tigris ones, which overlap those of the front-line armies. Local commanders say they believe the Iranian armed forces are beset by military and political difficulties of growing magnitude. "They are trying to reorganize the Revolutionary Gnard into a new army, but they are not succeeding," said General Maher Abdel Rashid, commander of the Third Army defending Basra to the northeast.

He said officers of the new army were squabbling among themselves and were of such mixed quality and different backgrounds to make an effective co

He said this mixture "does not give any hope it will be any better," especially since it is clear that the guard commanders "are at odds with the regular army, which is falling under the influence of the opposition. An aide to General Rashid said followers of Massoud Rajavi, the Paris-based leader of the Iranian opposition Mujahedin Khalq, had succeeded in broadcasting a message on internal army channels to soldiers in the field, calling on them to stop fighting. He also said "a big number" of defectors swam across the Shatt al-Arab to Iraqi lines on July 20, "fleeing from the Revolutionary Guard."

nuclear cooperation agreement that was initiated during President Ronald Reagan's visit to Beijing last spring. Terming the delays an insult to China, Mr. Zhang said in an interview Monday that U.S. conduct in the last few months had displayed "a mistrust about China which challenges our honesty."

Although China wants a nuclear he said, it could continue without one if necessary. "People have lived without nuclear energy for thou-sands of years," he noted.

The proposed agreement would let China obtain U.S. nuclear technology. It also would enable U.S. corporations to bid on construction projects, worth as much as $20 bil-lion, for nuclear reactors that China is planning.

Although the two countries reached tentative agreement on the nuclear pact last April, the Reagan administration never submitted the plan to Congress for its approval. Instead it has been seeking to obtain new assurances from China or other nations. In June, Senator Alan Cranston. Democrat of California, charged that China had been helping Pakistan to develop nuclear weapons. Senator Cranston and other critics have complained that, in reaching

On Monday, Mr. Zhang made it clear that China does not want to answer specific questions about whether it is providing technologi-cal help to Pakistan. "We are not interested in giving answers on specific questions, just as your practice is not to give answers on specific sensitive questions on military or intelligence matters, because if you start to give answers, or to answer some questions and not others, then it will give rise to lots of speculation and new questions."

He said China already had pledged that it would not use U.S. nuclear technology to help other countries. He said this promise was contained not only in Mr. Zhao's banquet toast but also in his official government report to the Na-tional People's Congress in Beijing last May. The approval of Mr. Zhao's report by the People's Congress, the ambassador said, "is something equivalent to a law passed by your government on Capitol Hill."

Asked whether he was saying that the U.S. efforts to obtain new assurances from China amounted to an insult, Mr. Zhang replied: "Yes, exactly, yes."

Of Amish and the Autos A Workable Solution

Officials in New York County Find Compromise of Old Laws and New

By Edward A. Gargan

DE PEYSTER, New York -Along the back roads of this rolling farm country, where the asphalt roads are scarred white by iron-rimmed buggy wheels, the old world of the Amish collided with the new world of governments and laws and led to the jailing of several Amish men who refused to pay

The dispute began on a late aunımn evening last year, when a horse-drawn black buggy was hit from behind by a fast-moving car. Three Amish were injured.

Like every buggy owned by Amish families here, it bore no reflector on the back, even though state regulations that took effect last September require orange tri-angles on all slow-moving vehicles. "Decorations" of any sort are shunned by the Amish here. The Amish, adhering to the religious precepts and practices of their 18th-century forebears, wear simple dark clothing, farm the land with horse-drawn plows and eschew modern inventions such as electricity and internal-combustion engines.

When the new regulations went into effect, Keith K. Knowlton, the sheriff of St. Lawrence County, went to discuss the matter with the

"I said this was something we could not put up with," said Dan J. Miller, an Amish minister and one of the religious leaders of the 60 Amish families in De Peyster. The sheriff, convinced that no

Town Justice Clifford Aven, and the justice gave them a choice between a $10 fine or 15 days in jail.

"We couldn't pay the fine." Mt.

Miller said. And so, the sheriff took Mr. Miller and five other Amish to the county jail in Canton. While many people favored having the Amish put signs on their buggies, everyone was shocked that a 15-day sentence was imposed. Lawvers huddled, and an agreement was struck

Its terms provided that the Amish would use the "best available" gray - not orange - reflective tape on the back of buggies and that they would mount a kerosene lantern with a red lens on the rear of each buggy. The agreement also called for buggy drivers to hug the right side of the road and to stay off the roads at night, starting half an

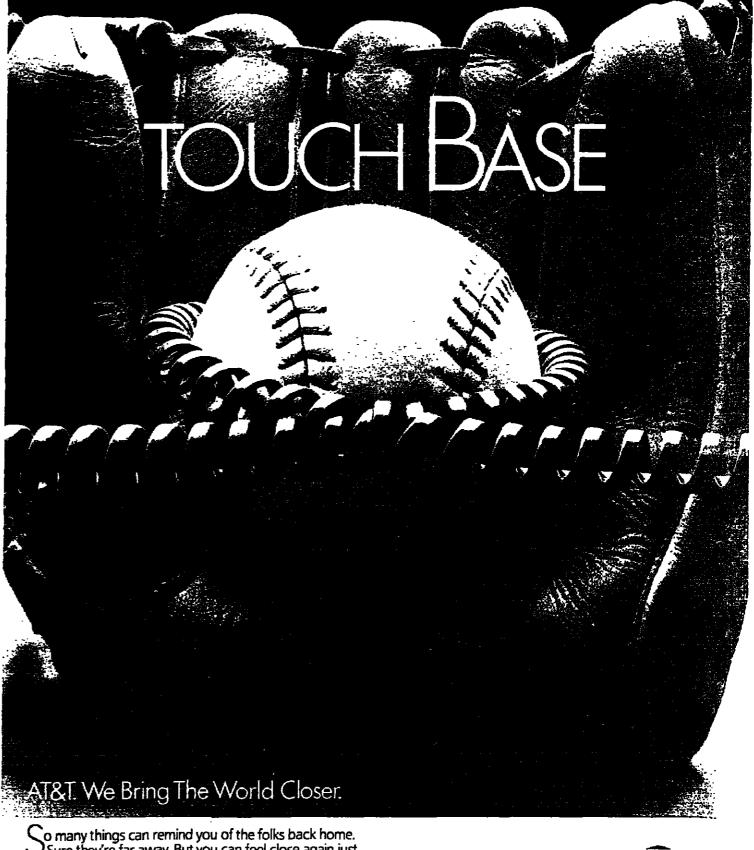

After the agreement was reached, everyone went back at court to try to deal with the ques tion of the lines. As expected, Mr. Miller and the other Amish again refused to pay. The judge reduced the jail sentence to five days. Then Sheriff Knowlton and the district attorney, William H. Power Jr. came up with a plan designed, as the sheriff put it. "to best sep?

Britain wants "to start a dialogue," but only if the one subject Argentines care most about - sovereignty - is not discussed. When delegates met in Switzerland, the topic arose and the British stalked out.

Why? Because, according to Britain's for-eign secretary. Sir Geoffrey Howe, Argentina wanted practical issues "linked to discussion of a mechanism to address the question of sovereignty." If that means what it implies, Britain will not even talk about how and when that vexatious matter might be discussed.

Britain thus disregards the plea for negotiations from its closest allies, including the United States. True, it paid with lives and treasure ω reverse Argentina's lawless grab of the Falklands. Yet even during the 1982 war, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had offered to discuss sovereignty. She went on to humble an arrogant junta and helped bring about a democratic transformation in Argentina. What can possibly justify intransigence now?

Mrs. Thatcher will talk about returning Argentina's dead and resuming commerce between the islands and Argentina. Her ostensible goal is to defend the rights and interests of 1,400 islanders who want to remain British. But their home has become a fortress, an anomalous remnant of a vanished empire. No Latin American nation accepts Britain's claim to the islands. It is hard to believe there cannot be an honorable settlement to bring British troops home, restore pormal trade and secure the British citizenship of Falklanders whatever flag, or flags, eventually fly over the island. When the islands were first seized by Britain in 1770, the stalwart Tory voice of Dr. Johnson rose in protest: "We have maintained the honor of the crown and the superiority of our influence. Beyond this, what have we acquired? What, but a bleak and gloomy solitude, an island thrown aside from human use. stormy in winter and barren in summer ... where a garrison must be kept in a state that contemplates with envy the exiles of Siberia: of which the expense will be perpetual and the use only occasional." In sum, a white elephant,

On Nicaragua's Elections

In Central America, elections have become crucial not only to establish the legitimacy of governments at home but also to qualify them for support in the international arena. So it is licaragua is now in the spotlight. On Nov. 4, it will be holding its first elections since the Sandinist revolution. Will they be fair?

So far, it looks as if they will not. The Marxists in Managua insist the purpose of elections is not to choose leaders but to "confirm revolutionary power." The Sandinists have relaxed only some of the restrictions on opposition campaigning and they keep the sword of emergency legislation in hand. Recently, Arturo Cruz, leader of the demoeratic opposition, was permitted to return to Managua from exile. He found campaigning restrictions unacceptably tight, and he feared the Sandinists would still control the state's instruments of power even if he won. But he was ready to enter the race, and thereby give the Sandinists the credibility they seek, if they would open peace talks with the Nicaraguan insurgents, who offer to lay down their arms if the Sandinists allow genuine elections. The regime rejected the Cruz bid, but he is bargaining still, hoping that his alliance's boycott will stir the Sandinists to make new concessions to win favor in the hemisphere and in Europe. Unfortunately, the Sandinists are not the only burden Nicaraguan democrats must carry. There is also the U.S.-sponsored "secret war." The war hands the regime the flag of nationalism and lets it tar Mr. Cruz as "a politician at the service of the Reagan administration." Without the war, the regime's totali-tarian tendencies would be on full view; with the war, it passes them off as measures required by a U.S.-provoked emergency.

The Nicaraguan elections are not shaping up well. But last May's Salvadoran elections, which the Reagan administration hailed as a triumph of democracy, were also flawed. The armed opposition and its political allies did not participate, and it took heavy U.S. support to help the center prevail.

There ought to be a reasonable consistency in U.S. policy. It should lie in seeing that El Salvador as well as Nicaragua runs a fair process. In both countries, however, electoral fairness is inextricably bound to the pursuit of internal peace. That must remain the Central American priority.

Other Opinion

The Good, the Bad, the Volcker?

If there is any single person who can be said to hold the fate of the world recovery in his grasp — not to mention President Reagan's re-election prospects — it is that towering giant of a man, Paul Volcker, the chairman of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board. He moves financial markets like no one else - because he helps to make them.

Deficit cuts are now thoroughly desirable in an American economy heading at an impressive rate for full employment. The prospect of deficit cuts, though, seems fairly feeble even after the elections. Mr. Reagan has just ruled out tax increases in response to Democratic jibes. Equally, Congress is unlikely to want to provide cuts by slashing welfare. So the ball will be back in Mr. Volcker's court for a while. With an unchanged monetary policy, rates will rise; the dollar would rise: Latin America's debtors get hit both ways; Mr. Volcker has to bail out more banks. Clearly, one of his greatest assets is that the financial markets regard him as a Clint Eastwood figure holding the good and the ugly of the White House and Capitol Hill at bay.... For a few dollars more, Mr. Volcker?

Strains in the ANZUS Alliance

President Ronald Reagan does not appear to be unduly worried about the threat by the new Labor government in New Zealand to deny American nuclear-armed ships access to its ports. The immediate reaction by New Zealand's new prime minister, David Lange, is, in effect, that Mr. Reagan is talking through his hat. There is no basis for optimism in the White House, he stresses

It can be readily seen how important New Zealand is in the context of global defense strategy, Without New Zealand, ANZUS [the defense alliance that also includes Australia and the United States] would be crippled.

Mr. Reagan's confidence appears to be based on Mr. Lange's intention to renegotiate the ANZUS pact with the United States. Election oledges are not absolutely binding; there is a strong possibility of Mr. Lange striking a compromise in his forthcoming negotiations with Mr. Reagan to allow American nuclear ships continued access to New Zealand ports on a limited basis - as the Australian government earlier achieved.

On Ferraro's Qualifications

Ideally, a candidate for vice president should be fully prepared to assume the duties of the presidency. Such a person would possess a wealth of experience in national government, politics and foreign affairs. In the real world, it Reagan and Jimmy Carter had no foreignpolicy experience or experience in national office. Yet, if the barrier to women on a major party ticket was to be broken, it was almost inevitable that the woman chosen would have less experience than some male contenders. Such is the ugly legacy of past discrimination.

Barriers to Japanese Steel

The recent recommendation by the U.S. International Trade Commission designed to protect the American steel industry from import competition poses a serious dilemma to President Ronald Reagan. The president has until Sept. 24 to decide whether to accept the recommendation, which calls for quotas and tariffs over a period of five years. But even if this were not an election year. Mr. Reagan would have to give the depressed industry some relief. It is hard to believe he would allow market forces to work themselves out.

Import curbs will be unfair to Japanese steelmakers who have exercised restraint over the years in their exports to the United States.

FROM OUR AUG. 1 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1909: An American Invasion of Paris PARIS - On the boulevards at present it is possible, if one has luck, to hear French being spoken. But the chances are that the language that will strike the car will be English, generalis with an American accent, a great deal of German and then the other languages of Europe in various proportions. But the predominant element just now is that from the United States. On the "terrasses" of boulevard cases the citizen of the United States is everywhere in evidence. At the theatres they fill the seats. The drivers of cabs and taxi-autos are trying to understand orders given in French tinged with every accent from the Atlantic to the Pacific slope. The Seine steamers are crowded with them, they invade the churches and picture galleries, they are to be found on every platform of the Eiffel Tower.

Ferraro's Uncertain Impact

By David S. Broder

 $B^{\, ext{OSTON}}$ — The Ferraro Phenomenon was on display in full force here the other day, when the Democratic vice presidential candidate swept in to address the delegates to the National Conference of State Legislatures. She established that she is a terrific drawing-card, but what else one can say about her at this time is uncertain. The legislators who were here for their annual meeting jammed three floors of the hotel, elbowing for spots on the escalators that would carry them to the ballroom where she would be speaking.

If anything, the Republicans were pushier than Geraldine Ferra-ro's fellow Democrats, and were panting to go back home with firsthand reports on Walter Mondale's secret weapon.

"I drove down this morning just to see her," said Donna Sytek, a New Hampshire state representative who is the Republican state chairman. "I expected to see some-thing dazzling, and she came across [as] mediocre."

In truth, Ms. Ferraro's critique of President Ronald Reagan's budget priorities and policies was little more than standard Democratic boiler plate, indifferently delivered. But there was a palpable excitement about the occasion that jumped gender and party lines — some kind of aura surrounding this pioneer woman politician that tells you not to underestimate the force waves emanating from her person. The responses to Ms. Ferraro I have heard are so strong, and so the Republican Party. It now ap-unpredictable, that I suspect we are pears that it will largely be a silent to his opponent, in an awkward and unintended fashion, as "the vice presidential thing" on the Democratic ticket. On Tuesday night television, there was Mr. Smooth himself, Ronald Reagan, assailing Ms. Ferraro's "demagoguery" in one sentence, and, almost in the next, praising her selection as "overdue."

The next day I watched all those the next day I watched all thos Republicans rushing up the escala-tors to get a look at Ms. Ferraro and then rushing out afterward to proclaim, with suspicious self-assurance, that she posed no threat to the Republican Party whatsoever.

The responses of Republican women legislators were particularly intriguing. In San Diego last December, several of them denounced the patronizing tone of a White House briefer and protested Mr. Reagan's dumping of two Republi-cans, Mary Louise Smith and Jill Ruckelshaus, from the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

It was evident then that any dissent from the White House orthodoxy that surfaced in 1984 would likely come from the distaff side of the Republican Party. It now apan going to be a long time gauging ber impact.

A week ago Monday, in a White House interview, I heard the normally chivalrous George Rush troit four years ago against the re-moval of support for the Equal Rights Amendment from the party's 1980 platform will not even bother to go to Dallas for this year's convention.

As one of them said, "Td rather keep my Republican credentials intact for 1988 than have them torn up in a futile light this summer."

Republican officials in independent areas prone to ticket-splitting. Rosalind Berman, a state repre-sentative from Connecticut, for example, found Ms. Ferraro "very charismatic," despite what she called "the lack of adequate homework or substance in her speech." Miss Berman added: "She's going to be a tough candidate."

Tough enough to pull votes away from Mr. Reagan? "I don't know."

Miss Berman said, "but she might pull out some votes from people who are apathetic" about the presidential candidates.

State Representatives Iris K. Holland of Massachusetts and Mary McCauley Burrows of Oregon offered Ms. Ferraro similar advice: Tone down the partisanship, beef up the substance, take advantage of your unique personal appeal.

Almost as if they were counseling a colleague, Ms. Holland said, "I hope she wears well," and Miss Burrows said, "She can get more Republicans if she talks more about herself and less about Reagan." I do not know what these reac-they may be of a broader voter response. The glimpses we have seen of Ms. Ferraro show this thoroughly competent House politician is a long way from being a polished national candidate. But she is genuinecratic ticket feeds unease among ly a new force in U.S. politics.

A Note to UN-Bashers: Vote Tallies Mislead By Jonathan Power I NITED NATIONS, New York drawal of Seminary of Campaign To Ca

ed Nations. He said he concurred with those who argued for an Ameri-can withdrawal from UNESCO, and that was that.

U.S. public opinion is, to say the least, indifferent to the United Nations. It is not particularly interested in the preparations under way for a debate on the future of Antarctica in the forthcoming General Assembly. nor in the prevailing optimism that the General Assembly will agree to a convention outlawing torture. It is not concerned about the demise of the Law of the Sea Treaty. Nor is it following the discussions that slowly perambulate on whether UN forces in southern Lebanon could be strengthened or given a larger role.

The small part of public opinion interested in international financial affairs may be following what the International Monetary Fund is up to, but only a fraction of that part is probably particularly conscious that it is a UN agency.

In Western Europe there is not much more enthusiasm, and less than had been the case. English news organizations such as The Guardian and nizations such as The Guardian and the British Broadcasting Corp. used to employ full-time UN correspondents. They no longer do.

Perhaps the greatest single reason for disenchantment is the widespread belief that the United Nations has been hijacked by the Third World nations that form a majority. This view has been consistently put forth by the Reagan administration.

Earlier this year the U.S. mission to the United Nations published a study that stated that not a single Third World country voted with the United States as much as half the time. The other nations of the Americas voted with the United States a mere 26.8 percent of the time, the African states 18.6 percent, and even the pro-American five-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations only 24.7 percent of the time. In contrast, Israel voted with the United States 93.3 percent of the time and Britain 84.2 percent.

The mission also argued that on 10 key issues it was outvoted six times — on two votes criticizing U.S. policies in South Africa, on two votes criticizing the U.S. invasion of Grenada, on one calling for a negotiated settlement in El Salvador and on one attacking U.S. policies in Israel. The United States was supported

UNITED NATIONS, New York
— During the Democratic pristan and of the Vietnamese from Cambodia, in rejecting an Iranian challenge to Israeli credentials and in challenge to Israen creneauals and in cailing for an investigation into viola-tions of the UN chemical arms treaty. But this way of composing a bal-ance sheet is misleading. Many reso-lutions never come to a vote; they are adopted by consensus. While the consensus procedure is used for many politically insignificant actions, it can also underline the breadth of support for an issue. Likewise the "key vote" concept only tells a part of the story in suggesting that the Third World and the Eastern bloc are singlehandand the Eastern bloc are singlehand-edly wounding vital U.S. interests. On some of these votes America's European allies also opposed its stands: Resolutions condemning hu-man rights abuses in El Salvador come to mind.

A study by the UN Secretarias came up with figures radically different from the American study. In 1983, 10 of 20 Security Council resolutions and 183 of 331 General Assembly actions were adopted without a negative note. In recent years, the percentage of times the Umited States voted with the majority, if the con-sensus votes are included, was 72.7 percent. If one sets aside votes on Israel and South Africa, the percentage jumps to 80 percent.

Most of the U.S. financial contribution to the United Nations is spent on humanitarian, social, cultural, economic and financial matters. On decisions that came to a vote in these areas, the United States voted with the majority more than 80 percent of the majority more than 80 percent of the time.

UN-bashing, or worse, UN-ignoring, may fit the popular mood, but it does not fit the facts and it is not a wise course. The UN peacekeeping role in Cyprus and the Middle East has at times been irreplaceable. The International Monetary Fund will play a more pivotal role in years ahead. The International Civil Aviation Organization recently passed unanimously a resolution expressly forbidding the shooting down of civilian aircraft, and the tens of other UN agencies will continue to set guidelines that will put brakes on member nations by raising the threshold of what is considered ac-

Taking the United Nations seriously is not easy. It is often its own worst enemy. But most of the time most of the work goes on to most of the members' satisfaction. Is this not an achievement worthy of note?

Polish Amnesty: A Blunt Call for Western Help

BRUSSELS — "2001, a Polish Odyssey," is about the best way to describe the outlook for the reimbursement of Poland's foreign debt, which soon will reach $30 billion.

Servicing so huge a debt costs the nation about $3 billion per year and will consume between a third and a half of the hard currency earned each year from foreign trade. The Poles most likely will enter the 21st century in debt, impoverished, with a mortgage on the nation.

This explains why, in addition to its domestic purposes, the recent amnesty of political prisers and common crimina sage directed to the West.

Any solution to Poland's economic problems must pass through Western banks. So it was not surprising that General Wojciech Jaruzelski, in the aggressive tone the Polish leader traditionally uses when addressing Westerners, would demand an end to the "infamous boycott of Poland" in the same breath that he announced the amnesty. The men in the Kremlin were the first really to understand this appeal. Nikolai Tikhonov, the Soviet prime minister, had the misfortune of being in Warsaw on July 22, the day after the amnesty was announce The Soviet press gave a long account of his visit without mentioning the amnesty. Mr. Tikhonov himself managed to address the Sejm without once alluding to the measure. Soviet newspaper readers had to wait 72 hours to hear of it.

While it is true that no decision as important as an amnesty could have been made without Moscow's approval, the Soviet discretion on the matter is understandable.

Officially, there is no such thing as a political prisoner in the Soviet Union. Persons incarcerated for what are, in fact, political crimes, are unlikely ever to be amnestied. But any press mention of the Polish move could have sparked hope among Soviet dissidents. The Kremlin was also distressed by the names of the Poles who received the amnesty. These included members of KOR, the intellectual mentors of Solidarity, and the members of Soviet propaganda has always depicted as the principal elements of "imperialist subversion within the socialist family."

Outside of those Poles labeled as Zionists, no political group has been assailed as violently by Moscow as KOR and Solidarity. Recently, a special television program on the "plot" fo-mented by KOR was telecast throughout the Soviet Union. (In Poland, where it was also shown, it elicited little more than amusement.)

The Novosti press agency has just published a book by Vadim Trubnikov, "a researcher in philosophy and specialist in Polish affairs."
Under the title of "The Failure of Operation Polonia," Mr. Trubnikov reveals the plot that the United States and KOR allegedly planned to destabilize Poland and the rest of the bloc.

If, despite all this political fiction, the Kremlin gave the green light to General Jaruzelski to free such detainess, its purpose can only have been to allow the Polish leader to get back into the West's good graces. Eastern Europe can do no more for Poland's economy. So Moscow mounted its own "Operation Polonia" to remove the country from its list of mendicants. How did the West react?

The response the Polish leader hoped for is not imminent. The sanctions imposed on Poland after martial law was imposed in Dec. 13, 1981, involved a refusal to reschedule Polish external debt and a rejection of further credit. The lifting of these sanctions was tied to three conditions: an end to martial law, release of political prisoners and the start of a dialogue with independent institutions.

Two of these conditions have been met, though in principle only, since some political prisoners remain in Polish jails. The third condition, for open dialogue with society, does not appear to be on General Jaruzelski's agenda. And there's the rub, for the real Western response to the amnesty will become visible only when Warsaw's intentions are clear.

The European Community's Council of Ministers was unambiguous about this: In 14 lines, it expressed the hope that the annesty "reflects the wish of the government to meet the aspirations of the Polish people for a dialogue and for reform" and "that it will be followed by new measures destined to encourage a national Such a European response makes sense

Washington was the first to take the sanctions seriously, but also the first to repeat that beyond the stick lay the carrot. Thus, just after the state of siege was lifted in July 1983, President Ronald Reagan renewed the right of Polish ships to lish in U.S. zones and gave Polish charter plannes the right to land on U.S. soil. Nevertheless, the major sanctions are still in force: a refusal to allow Poland to return to the

A tough day for Tikhonov.

International Monetary Fund, a withholding of most-favored-nation trading status, and the rejection of all U.S.-guaranteed credits.

This is what General Jaruzelski sought to change when he ordered the release of prisoners. But Mr. Reagan is in no hurry. Washington is waiting for a liberalization that is less ephemeral than what the amnesty represents.

Time for a Moratorium on Latin Debt Repayment

WASHINGTON — By now the Latin American debt story has become a predictable cliff-hanger. In the nick of time Argentina met its June 30 deadline for payment of $350 million in back interest, but the crisis is due to recur in the fall. Latin American countries owe about $370 billion to banks in the United States, Western Europe and Japan. And their inability to keep current on interest payments, let alone installments of principal, is universally recognized.

For this appalling state of affairs the major "money-center" banks and economic advisers are largely responsible. In the 1970s, repeating the pattern of the 1920s, the bankers threw fiscal conservatism to the winds and engaged in an orgy of competitive lending. Loans were pressed on nations teetering on the brink of insolvency and at the mercy of world commodity prices. Academic quacks in the garb of "development economists" propounded the fatuous doctrine that debt can be ovramided indefinitely.

As a result, the debtor nations are so buried under a mountain of debt that now they borrow just to pay interest. Developing countries that should be capital importers have been turned into net capital export-ers to the tune of $20 billion a year. As is usual in such cases, the victims of this multibillion-dollar scam are being treated as culprits.

acreage traditionally used for domestic food crops into increased cultivation of export crops - coffee, soy beans, sugar and cocoa. Half its export earnings are spent to service its debt while food prices soar and malnutrition spreads. In the last year riots over rises in food prices have broken out in Brazil, Argentina, the Dominican Republic and Chile. Brazil's ambassador to Washington recently charged that developing economies are suffering "a kind of re-emergence of the tithe system we knew so well when Brazil was a Portuguese colony." wise. The budget cutbacks so blithely urged by the IMF and the banks would end Argentina's price-index-ation, which allows the worker to keep abreast of inflation. The first reductions would bring the Peronist unions into the streets, and that would be the end of Argentina's democratic revival. A debtor revolt is brewing and long overdue. It is time for the political leaderships of major debtor nations to put their creditors on notice that they will no longer allow recessionary measures to be forced down their throats. At the next payment crisis, the debtor nation under pressure should demand that its debts be rescheduled, with repayment installments keyed to a fixed percentage of export earnings, payable only in years when the debtor nation has a favorable balance of payments. If creditors refuse to reschedule, the debtor should proclaim a moratorinm on repayment.

Such action would shake the banking community, but predic-tions of collapse are unnecessarily dire. The major banks would suffer a serious diminution in earnings but it would be temporary. They should be preparing to meet that eventuality, rather than demanding that the victims of their errors pay for them with political suicide.

There is much to recommend in a moratorium. A debtor nation's economy would not necessarily be impaired; only government credit would be adversely affected. During and after World War II, private investment in Latin America soared even though Peruvian, Mexican and other government bonds remained in default for up to 30 years. Even these obligations eventually were settled, though not at par or with back interest, and obviously with no adverse effect on the later credit standing of the borrower.

Lightened of the intolerable weight of their repayment burdens. the finances of debtor nations would at one stroke spring back into balance. Currencies would stabilize and outside private investment would flow in Governments would be forced to put their budgets on a self-financing revenue basis. The banks would be taught a salutary lesson.

The writer, a senior fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for Interna-tional Peace, contributed this comment to the Los Angeles Times.

LETTER Civil Rights in Israel

Regarding "... And the Non-De-bate on Civil Liberty" (July 19). Philippa Strum takes for granted that the institutions developed in the United States are the perfect model for all other countries. It follows that her proposed solution to the alleged civil rights problems in Israel is the adoption of a constitution.

For historical reasons the Israeli legal system is largely patterned on that of the British, who never both-ered with a formal constitution yet have maintained a fairly good record on civil rights. Some of the Lain. American countries, on the other hand, have constitutions that read even better than the U.S. Constitution — but this does not seem to guarantee individual rights. guarantee individual rights.

Similarly, Ms. Strum chastises the Israelis for not accepting her definition of democracy. She ascribes the "unusual degree of freedom of speech and assembly" there not to Israeli culture and tradition but to the West European education of many of the old judges. (This took place mostly in prewar Germany, hardly a guarantee of sensitivity to civil rights.) Moreover, her selectivity as to whose rights should be protected reveals that her motives are political, rather than a concern for civil rights as such. She rejects the right of individuals to object to autopsies of their relatives. But she finds the unsuccess ful attempt to prevent an openly pro-PLO group from running in the elections "frightening."

NEW YORK - A builder, Donald Trump, has said he hopes to construct the world's tallest building on a 26-acre un-derwater site that New York City plans to fill in along the East River in lower Manhattan.

The building, Mr. Trump said, would be 150 stories, or 1,940 feet (591 meters) high, and would have offices, apartments and a hotel in its 5 million to 6 million square feet (465,000 to 557,000 square me-

Finally, the 3d Corps in northern France has one armored and one infantry division.

Although NATO commanders see the six French armored divisions as a plus on the Western side, there are some doubts about the effectiveness of the main French tank, the AMX-30, which in the view of some critics is becoming obsolete. The French and West Germans have agreed to work together on a new tank, but it is unlikely to be deployed until 1991 at the earliest

13 Die, Scores Are Hurt as Train Hits Bull on Tracks in Scotland

EDINBURGH — Thirteen persons were killed and scores injured Monday when a crowded high-speed commuter train bound from Edinburgh to Glasgow struck a young bull and plowed into an embankment. It was Britain's worst rail disaster since 1967.

Of about 100 injured in the accident near the village of Polmont, 44 were detained in the hospital overnight. Many had serious head Railroad officials said a major catastrophe was averted when a econd train, heading in the other direction from Glasgow to Edin-

Soviet Union's Frustrations in Europe Cause U.S. Chill, Rand Report Claims

SANTA MONICA, California

The Soviet Union is frustrated over its failure to achieve objectives in Europe and this frustration is a partial cause of the chill in relations with the United States, according to a report released Monday by the Rand Corp.

The study alleged that the Soviet Union was facing failure in its goal of establishing a tightly knit East European bloc under their control and a weak Western Europe that would look to Moscow instead of Washington for leadership.

Prepared by John Van Oudenaren, an analyst for the U.S. Air Force, the report is part of a continning Rand study of Soviet vulthe past in technical education and hence much easier to train in the use of advanced weapons.

Two recent but unrelated events underscore how far the Soviet Union is from realizing its longterm goals, the report said. One was the rise of the independent trade union Solidarity in Poland that pointed up the weakness of Communist control. The other was the deployment of cruise and Pershing-2 missiles in Western Europe despite strident Soviet opposition.

But now the townspeople of Belchite find themselves living next door to decaying, depressing and dangerous ruins.

Their problem is compounded by a tangle of bureaucracy, the claims of conservationists and the conflict between those who want to obliterate the memory of the Civil War and those who cannot forget

"If we don't do something soon. neone is going to get killed in there. The place is dangerous," Belchite's mayor, Domingo Serrano, said in an interview.

The mayor and the eight councillors have come up with a plan to preserve the most interesting sec-tions of the old town and buildoze

Mayor Serrano said the only parts of the town, which once had 4,000 inhabitants, worth keeping were the facades of the main street and several large buildings, including three churches. He said he wanted to turn the remaining area into a park: "It seemed the sensible and obvious solution."

But he acknowledges that he failed to reckon with the fury of Spanish rightists and the pressure of conservationists.

Belchite has special significance for the rightists, and it was declared national monument by Franco after the Civil War.

It was Franco's men who held the town, set on a bluff at a crossroads guarding entry from the southeast into the Ebro Valley and the city of Zaragoza, against a su-perior force of about 24,000 soldiers of the Republican side.

They held out virtually to the last man, and Belchite entered the history books as a name synonymous with heroism.

Spanish Town's Goose Is Cooked

The Associated Press

MADRID — The governor of Toledo province has provisionally fined a town 500,000 pesetas ($3,000) for defying an edict that forbids the ceremonial beheading of geese during the town's annual fiesta.

Governor Pedro Valdecantos Garcia told José Luis Mora, mayor of El Carpio de Tajo, on Monday that he had 10 days to explain why officials in the town had ignered the prohibition. Otherwise the town must pay the fine.

A gubernatorial assistant said that "international and national protests" had moved the governor to ban the goose beheading, which took place on

Algerian Plan Seems to Confirm Shift To Less Doctrinaire Economic Policy

By Nicholas Kristof

Washington Post Serrice ALGIERS - Algeria's latest economic blueprints and a new cabinet led by a U.S.-educated prime minister appear to be consolidating this country's movement from socialism toward more private enterprise and a warmer relationship with Western Europe and the United States.

The draft five-year plan for 1985-1989, which the Council of Ministers approved July 2, aims to boost private farming, water supplies, housing and light industry instead of the state-run heavy industry that dominated the economy under President Houari Boumedienne, who died at the end of

on the production's theatrical incal flaws. Indeed, revisions of the staging went on right up to the final night's "Götterdämmerung." After a protracted search, Sir

Georg was replaced by Peter Schneider, a Vienna-born conductor who is musical director of the city of Bremen. "One cannot compare the last year of Chéreau with the first year of Hall," argued the soft-spoken Schneider, 45, who said he had concentrated his efforts on "intensifying" the musical performance.

Sir Peter praised his new conductor for spreading "serenity" among the cast and contended too, that his "Ring" — widely seen as "ro-mantic" as well as traditional was entitled to a bit more indulgence. "This was a rough sketch."

The British director found solace in the stormy receptions of previous Bayreuth "Rings" in their aiden seasons. By tradition, a "Ring" production has a long run in Bayreuth. "It's like a new inter-pretation of religion, the first time," he said. "It's heretical at the beginning and gradually it becomes orthodoxy. That is really the parallel: it is religious. The undisputed high priest of the

Wagner cult is Wolfgang Wagner, the composer's 65-year-old grandson, who runs the festival in the manner of an enlightened despot. An energetic and informal man, vho is known around Bayreuth as "Wolfgang" and can speak the lo-cal Frankish dialect, Wagner observed that even his grandfather was "completely unsatisfied" with the one "Ring" he put on here.

The grandson took an open and democratic view of the Hall "Ring." "We will see this year and the next if it works." said Wagner. "This will have to be decided by the press and the public. long-lost training ground of a master dramatist, but gradually it be-comes clear that the intention is to restore the notion of Chekhov as a writer of plays for large casts. Because the play has more usually been called "Platonov," it has been assumed to be about him: in fact, despite Ian McKellen's marvelously comic turn in that chaotic role of the schoolmaster forever falling over his broken promises, it is now a tragi-farce about 14 people, all of them locked together in a eries of disastrous extramarital re-

Christopher Morahan has given "Wild Honey" a production of ex-treme confidence and spectacle (when did you last see a man going under a train on stage?) but he has managed also to give it moments of absolute tranquillity, so that the final lurch into Feydeau bed-hopping farce is made all the funnier by its social desperation: "If you won't stay as my wife, stay as my

To the King's Head has come a musical version of "The Towering Inferno" — not, as you might expect, forming the climax to a Mel Brooks sequel to "Springtime for Hitler," but rather as the climax to "Six for Gold." Written by Warner. The first three shows are set n England and built around music halls, waxwork displays and the modern theater; the second-set is American-based and deals with a potential pope from Milwanker who once lived with an aquicade queen (that's all in one show), the opening of the Chrysler building 1930 and a skyscraper fire in Man-hattan 1984. The Two Germanys' 20-Year 'Traffic in Human Beings'

ONN — Two decades ago, Erich Mende is literally the selling of East Germans to West started buying political prisoners from East Germany. He wanted it kept secret. At the time, he went around to the offices of Vest Germany's main magazines, newspapers and television stations to explain the delicate more of the transactions and to ask them to

Mr. Mende's entreaties were effective. Even hen one of the liberated political prisoners oke an oath of silence and tried to sell his ory to West German publications, he was buffed by the editors.

The methods of winning the liberation of bitical prisoners in East Germany have beame more sophisticated since 1963, when Lud"Honecker will come in September," he said ig Rehlinger, a Bonn official, nervously delived an envelope containing 180,000 Deutsche arks in a Berlin subway as the down payment the first consignment of eight inmates. Now retired and working on his memoirs, Mr. Mende, 67, is a lonely voice in Bonn denouncing what he calls "a traffic in human beings that is very close to a slave trade."

He notes that when the business started, at the instigation of a cash-hungry East Germany. Bonn and East Berlin had no diplomatic relations, making extraordinary procedures under-

The solid West German consensus behind the transactions has been cemented by the involvement of the major parties. The policy was started by the Christian Democrats, resumed by the But there is still little publicity. With occamul exceptions that do little more than confirm the rule, West German politicians and the crats. There are, as well, powerful humanitarian arguments in its favor.

> "We know that this is trafficking in human beings, but we support any reasonable way to get people free," said Uta Giersch, who spent ears in an East German prison and now heads the West German organization of former prisoners. "We are blackmailed on humanitarian grounds. It's macabre."

> In the 1960s the political prisoners released Christian Democrats and Social Democrats who had resisted the imposition of communism in the Soviet Zone of Germany at the end of the war. Today, according to a knowledgeable official, about 70 percent are East Germans who have been convicted of trying to flee the country. Most are in their 20s or 30s.

Since the 1960s, about 22,000 political prisonsources, but their exact cost is a matter of some mystery. In a book on the subject, Michel Mey-er, a French journalist, reckoned that by 1976 Bonn had paid 761 million Deutsche marks for about 11,000 prisoners; at stable prices, this would mean 1.5 billion marks, or $54 million at the current rate of exchange, for the 22,000.

The human trade, though, extends well be-yond political prisoners. For years the West German government has also paid considerable sums to the East Germans to expedite so-called family reunifications, a generously interpreted rubric that has brought 293,000 people to West Germany since the construction of the Berlin

This year alone more than 25,000 East Germans have been allowed out. By all accounts, hush dealings with secret slush funds were highthis commerce has been subject to enormous

The Springer newspaper chain, which has benefited from systematic leaks on the drama of East German asylum-seekers, reported that Bonn paid $1.8 million in July to win the freedom of 55 East Germans who had taken refuge in the West German Mission in East Berlin. 7 OLFGANG Vogel, a cosmopolitan East Berlin lawyer who has negotiated virtually all the exchanges, has justified the trade on the ground that West Germany ers have been liberated, according to various must compensate East Germany for the "dampolitical prisoners have inflicted on its "socialist order." In the case of legally approved emigrants, the East German government con-tends it must be compensated for the cost of the departing citizens' educations.

> These elegant arguments cannot mask moments of unease. Klaus Boelling, a former West German envoy to East Berlin, recounted that hard-liners in the East German government managed in 1973 to halt the traffic in political prisoners, maintaining it was giving commu-nism a bad name. A meeting in May 1973 between Mr. Honecker and Herbert Wehner, a lighted this year when Egon Franke, a former Social Democratic minister for German relations, and his top aide. Edgar Hirt, were indicted for being unable to account for $2 million in

There is no suggestion in the indictment for "breach of trust" that Mr. Franke pocketed the money. But the case disclosed sloppy bookkeeping and highly dubious expenditures, such as a $3,000 festivity for Mr. Vogel, the East Berlin lawyer, and $20,000 for renovating the offices of his West Berlin counterpart, who was also indicted. In the ministry budget, the renovations were listed as "humanitarian efforts."

Even so, like the larger traffic in human beings, the Franke scandal has become a nonsubject for the West German press. So, too, has Romania's entry into the human trade. Since a 1978 visit to Bucharest by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the financially weak Romanian government has been doing a brisk business selling ethnic Germans to Bonn — for cash. Many of the East German beneficiaries of

Party Fights in Grenada May Aid Gairy Comeback

By Joseph B. Treaster New York Times Service

T. GEORGE'S, Grenada — As Grenada prepares for its first elections in eight years, the strongest contender appears to be a party led by the former prime minister, Sir Eric Gairy, who is widely remembered as corrupt and repressive.

Sir Eric, 62, has become a formidable force not because of renewed popularity but because at least three other parties threaten to split the vote, according to Grenadians and foreign diplomats.

The United States and many of Grenada's business and religious leaders have been en-couraging the leaders of the three parties, all of whom are pro-Western centrists, to join in a coalition against Sir Eric's Grenada United Labor Party.

But the three parties are at loggerheads over how many candidates from each party would be put forward on a joint slate for the 15 seats that make up the Parliament.

No date has been set for the elections, but officials have said they will be held this year. Many Grenadians say they wish the elections would be delayed.

They are still dazed, they say, from the violence last fall that brought the People's Revolutionary Government of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop to an end and from the invasion by the United States that followed.

"Many of us feel we don't want elections now," said Marva Gweneth Evans, a senior civil servant in the Ministry of Trade. "It's too soon. It's as if we just had a molar tooth removed. The pain is still there."

Otto George, who served as the highestranking civil servant in the Ministry of Health for a decade, said: "We've had such bad experiences with politicians."

Mrs. Evans added: "Most of us would rather see the interim government in place for another five years."

Loren E. Lawrence, the senior U.S. diplomat in Grenada, is among those who think elections should be held as soon as possible. "My guess," he said, "is that very little of the private American investment money that we hope to see come here will actually come here until there's an elected government." WO former members of the leftist follow his instructions. But they are regarded as having little chance experience."

Sir Eric said he hoped that the United States and Britain would establish military bases on Grenada and that the new airport being completed here would be named Ronald Reagan International Airport. Grenadians say that the moderate parties are not as well organized as Sir Eric's party and none have as unshakable a following. They estimate that Sir Eric, who was knighted in 1977, might get as much as 25 percent of the vote and that none of the others running alone could equal that.

S INCE early this year, Herbert Blaize, a lawyer who has run against Sir Eric since the 1950s and has also been prime minister, has been trying to form a coalition of the main moderate parties.

He has won the allegiance of Francis Alexis, leader of the Grenada Democratic Movement. Mr. Alexis lived abroad for more than 10 years and served as a deputy law school dean in Barbados before returning to Grenada in December.

But Mr. Blaize and Mr. Alexis have been unable to reach a compromise with the other leading moderate party, the National Democratic Party led by George I. Brizan, a teacher in Grenadian public schools. The three moderate leaders agree that Mr.

Blaize would be their choice as prime minister. "The basic stumbling block is the sharing of the seats among the three parties," said Mr. Brizan.

While the moderates have been trying to reach a compromise. Sir Eric has been selecting candidates to present to the voters. Unlike the other party leaders. Sir Eric says he does not intend to try for election himself. But he says that if his party wins, as he expects, he, as president of the party, will determine who is named prime minister. Fur-

Government Tries to Help Lonely Hearts of China

ELTING — "Twenty-eight-year-old min-er, good-looking, healthy, interested in literature and calligraphy, earning $44 a month, no family burdens, seeks kindhearted, healthy unmarried woman of similar looks and age. Please send recent photograph."

The notice, placed by Chen Xin, a miner in Henan province, was just one of 10 advertisenewspaper China Youth. Such advertisements cost more than a week's wages for the average Chinese worker, but it is not too much for a lonely man with few other prospects of finding a Before Mao died in 1976, young Chinese were urged to devote their energies to the nation and the Communist Party. They were supposed to marry late and to demand a good ideological attitude in choosing a spouse. But with such Maoist attitudes behind them, more young people are worrying about getting married. A quiet desperation has seized some older ones who lost their prime years toiling on farms during the Cultural Revolution of 1966 to 1976.

Their plight has been recognized by the Chinese leadership, including the party's general secretary, Hu Yaobang, and the senior economic planner, Chen Yun, who called the number of single people over 30 "not an insignificant social problem" for China. They urged the party, the National Women's Federation and the state-run trade unions to become involved - that is, to start matchmaking.

The task is formidable. Beijing has 100.000 single people 30 to 40 years old. Shanghai has 127,000. The situation is worse in rural areas, as a letter to the newspaper China Daily suggested this month

Zhou Mingnan wrote from Nanchang in Jiangxi province about the despair of a schoolmate, now 32, who was sent from Shanghai to rural Jiangxi in the Cultural Revolution and who is still teaching school there 14 years later. "In such a small place," Miss Zhou wrote, "it is not easy for her to look for a suitable partner. So it is a serious problem, not only in big cities. but also in small towns and the countryside. I want to make an appeal on behalf of those over 30 to the social organizations concerned: Show great concern for them and help them."

In old China, marriages were usually arranged by parents, until the Communist government prohibited such interference. The custom has not entirely changed. A survey of 462 cou-ples in the industrial city of Tianjin last year found that more than 80 percent were introduced through friends or colleagues and 10 percent were handled by parents. Fewer than 9 percent found their own spouses.

Despite some liberalization in recent years. China is still a straitlaced society in which young people find it hard to meet and socialize easily with the opposite sex. There are no bars or other hangouts where single people can go in the evening. Privacy is rare. Because of the housing shortage, most young Chinese live with their parents or in communal dormitories at their jobs. Yet being married remains the socially acceptable status.

In June, several thousand young people were invited to a mixer at the Palace of Culture in Beijing. Some tried dancing with each other at arm's length. More sat on the sidelines and watched the staid fox trot, which was considered immoral when they were growing up. Retired workers designated as chaperons bustled about trying to break the ice with movies, games and a calligraphy contest.

Marriage introduction bureaus run by the Communist Youth League and the women's federation are also busy, although many Chinese are too shy to use them except as a last resort. Even then they tend to arrive accompanied by relatives or friends.

Beijing's first and largest marriage bureau opened four years ago in the Chaoyang district. 📝 About 900 of the 11,000 applicants have reported getting married. The bureau director. Xu Jiashe, said: "Some people don't like others to know how they got married, so they don't tell

A smaller card, with photograph attached, lists the qualities they want in a mate. If they have not found someone after three introductions, they must enroll again. The bureau arranges tea parties, excursions and other get-togethers to make the blind dates less painful.

"People come here to find partners because they feel it is difficult to find someone in soci-ety," Mr. Xu said. "But frankly, some of them set their sights too high. If it is difficult out in society with their high standards, it will be company, said he paid for the inquiry into Mr. Donovan's investigators. He denied that there had been any wrongdoing or that Mr. Donovan had played a role in the counterinvestigation.

WO years after a special federal prosecutor completed his investigation of Mr. Donovan, some of the issues in the case remain unresolved.

The special prosecutor, Leon Silverman, and a grand jury in Brooklyn investigated allega-tions that Mr. Donovan had links to organized crime. But Mr. Silverman concluded in two separate reports, in June and in September of 1982, that there was "insufficient credible evi-dence to prosecute" Mr. Donovan. Two witnesses in the original Donovan inves-tigation were killed, but federal authorities have never conclusively established whether their murders were related to the Donovan case. One of the issues in the current inquiry is whether a leaked confidential FBI report naming one of the witnesses played any part in his subsequent murder. Laura Brevetti, a prosecutor with the federal strike force, confirmed that she had "received the material from Mr. Smist and am looking into it." She declined further comment.

Mr. Schiavone denied that anything illegal was done during the investigation he sponsored. Mr. Smist "saw ghosts where there were none,"

Mr. Schiavone said. HEODORE Geiser of Newark, the Schiavone lawyer who oversaw the coun-L terinvestigation, said "there must be a shortage of crime in Brooklyn" for the strike force to be bothering with the Smist material. Mr. Geiser said that it was unusual but not improper to investigate the investigators.

He acknowledged that, several weeks before the murder of the grand jury witness, he had received from a Schiavone investigator the confidential portion of an FBI report identifying that witness. The witness was Frederick Furino, a former

New Jersey Teamster Union official who had been identified by an FBI informant as a "bagman" carrying payoffs between Mr. Donovan and another Teamster official in the 1960s. Mr. Furino denied the allegation, according to the confidential material.

But he then flunked an FBI lie detector test when he repeated his denial. A month later, in June 1982, his body was found in the trunk of his car on a Manhattan street. There was a single bullet wound in his head. Investigators have never solved the crime or determined why Mr. Furino was killed.

In several of the conversations, a member of the staff of Senator Orrin Hatch, a Utah Republican who is on the Labor Committee, leaked information damaging to Mr. Donovan to newspaper report-ers, Mr. Smist said.

Robert Flynn, an attorney for Mr. Schiavone. said that he had instructed Mr. Sharer that it was legal in the District of Columbia to conceal a tape recorder on his body and tape conversations. Mr. Flynn said that, as far as he knew, that was the only taping Mr. Sharer did. Mr. Sharer could not be reached for comment. His attorney. John Hooker, said that Mr. Sharer had done nothing illegal.

Some of the taped material Mr. Sharer re-corded was used by Mr. Donovan at a White House confrontation with Mr. Hatch at which Mr. Reagan was present, Mr. Smist said that Mr. Sharer had told him. Spokesmen for Mr. Hatch and Mr. Donovan said the two denied ever attending meetings at which such taped material was used. Mr. Donovan also declined to comment on the material Mr. Smist obtained. Bill Hart, a spokesman for the White House, said that it also would have no comment.

The Schiavone records that Mr. Smist obtained also contain notations of attempts by Schiavone's private detectives to contact the special prosecutor's main investigator; statements that sources at the FBI in Washington and New York were talking with Mr. Schiavone's private detectives about the Donovan investigation; and a warning from one Schiavone investigator that some of his colleagues were in danger of breaking the law.

Robert Shortley, the main private detective hired by Mr. Schiavone, denied that he or anyone he had hired committed illegal acts. Mr. Shortley said that many of the notes Mr. Smist received were open to misinterpretation since they were in his handwriting and undated. Mr. Shortley said that he himself had had difficulty in deciphering their contents two years later.

GETTING UP FOR IT — Weightlifters have various ways (including grunts, scowls and stares) of preparing themselves for competition, but Takashi Ichiba prefers the back flip, The Japanese lifter, 23, did one before all but one of his six lifts in the snatch and the clean and jerk in Monday's Olympic final in the 123-pound/56-kilogram class. Ichiba finished fourth, with a total of 551 pounds, but his flips earned him gold-medal applause.

U.S. Executives May Find Going Home Is Difficult

By KEITH HAMMONDS

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

New York Times Service ONDON — With the dollar spurting to records. Americans overseas are enjoying a salary windfall: In many Western countries, housing, food and travel are, at the moment, substantially cheaper than at home. But the dollar can trade both ways "It's great living at $1.32" to the bound, said Craig Colberg, an institutional stockbroker from Goldman Sachs International who has lived in London for five years. "But I was here at $2.46 and it was no fun then." he added. Companies normally try to account for foreign-exchange fluctuations when compensating expatriate executives; most will also adjust for additional tax, housing and educational expenses. Our objective is that the amount a person is paid after dealing with housing, dual taxation and any exira costs will keep pace with what he would be making in the States," said Robert J. Haughten, manager of international employee relations for General Electric Co.

The cost of sending an employee overseas is high even when the dollar is strong.

In addition, overseas employees are generally paid premiums ranging from 10 percent to 50 percent of their base salary. At some companies, like General Electric, the premium depends on the perceived inconvenience of a location: London-based executives receive a lower bonus than those assigned to Lagos or Kuala Lumpur. Other organizations pay a standard premium for any

In many cases, the largest single cost for the company is an employee's tax expense, primarily for taxes due his host government. In some nations, like Norway and Malaysia, the expatriate's tax liability may exceed his actual salary by the time "perks"

There may be U.S. taxes for the U.S. company to pick up as well. The Internal Revenue Service allows most citizens working abroad to exclude $80,000 of earned income from income tax. But taxable income often includes housing and other companysaid expenses, so many executives end up making more than 180,000. If total taxes paid to both the United States and host government are more than the employee would have paid staying nome, most companies will pick up the difference.

In the end, the cost of sending an executive overseas is substantial. Even in times of a strong dollar, experts say, a company will spend two or three times an employee's original alary to maintain him abroad.

THE most difficult part of an overseas assignment may well be coming home to the United States. In two studies of U.S. and Canadian executives sent abroad, Nancy J. Adler, issociate professor of management at McGill University, found hat many suffered serious professional and personal setbacks ipon returning home. More than half said the jobs they returned o were less satisfying than their overseas posts.

And an executive's foreign job often involves far more creativty and responsibility than the one he or she returns to. "The eality is that over 50 percent of the expatriates feel the experimee abroad has hindered their careers, and the rest are neutral,"

Moreover, she said, the supervisors of those returning from werseas jobs have a "very strong xenophobic response," tending o dismiss the employees' overseas experience.

There may be financial problems as well. If the executive sold a louse before leaving, he or she may not be able to afford a new xecutive may have become accustomed to having the rent, hildren's schooling and transportation costs paid by the compa-

So far, little has been done to address the problems of coming nome. Some companies, like Exxon Corp., now encourage em-loyees to keep their U.S. homes while overseas, and may arrange o pay for property management. Alcan helps find new jobs for eturning employees who cannot be fitted at the home office.

Surplus In Japan Is Record

Renewed Conflict On Trading Likely

TOKYO — Japan announced Tuesday a record $4.85-billion surplus in trade of merchandise for June that diplomats said could set off another round of bickering with major trading partners. Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, echoing a speech last month in which he urged the Japanese to buy more foreign goods, said the country must increase its imports to try to stave off overseas complaints about the deluge of Japa-nese video recorders, cars, microchips and steel.

He said at a cabinet meeting that he was also worried about slow imports from Asia, following re-cent complaints from the region.

Western Europe and the United States have criticized Japan's level of exports. After Tuesday's figures were released, one Western diplo-mat said: "The seeds of further conflict are being sown."

The Finance Ministry said exports in June were worth $14.65 billion and imports $9.80 billion.

The previous record monthly surplus on merchandise items was $4.23 billion in March.

Taking into account earnings from nonmerchandise items such as shipping and insurance, Japan's current account surplus rose to a record $4.38 billion in June from $1.86 billion May. The May figure had narrowed considerably from $3.52 billion in April.

Japan also registered a record amount of overseas investment last month at $6.23 billion, up 40 percent from the previous high of $4.42 billion in April.

Economists said this was a major cause of the yen's recent weakness against the dollar and had helped to create an overall balance of pay-ments deficit for June of $2.25 billion, sharply up from $1.22 billion in May and $1.38 billion in June

"Both goods and money are going out of Japan and probably most to the United States," a Bank of Tokyo official said.

Japan attributes much of its trading success to the low prices paid by its companies for oil and other industrial raw materials. while the strong dollar has made Japanese goods unusually attractive to Americans.

However, Western Europe and the United States complain that Japan's success costs them jobs and damages their industry.

Japan is due to have trade talks with the United States in Tokyo in the courts. "We will protest the published." September and with the European effective date and the substance

Zigong Plant Is Industrial Model

Steel Unit's Tax Depends on Its Output Level

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service ZIGONG, China - When Zigong's steel-casting plant re-opened in 1975, it was so short of funds that the management could not afford to buy some bamboo sleeping mats:

The factory had been moved from Shanghai to Sichnan province in 1965 to help spur the economy of southwestern China. Then the Cultural Revolution began and production of steel valves was suspended while the plant's Maoist factions quarreled. For the next mine years, nothing was manufactured there.

There were no roads and people had to make their own way, said Wang Zizhen, now the factory director, recalling his arrival with a team to reopen the plant. "Water was flowing into dirches and the place was covered with scrap metal." From a paralyzed bastion of leftist ideology, the factory in Zigong, a city of 500,000 best known for producing salt, has developed into a model of the industrial reforms promoted by China's leader. Deng Viaconia. China's leader, Deng Xiaoping. The factory presents a case study of the kind of production incentives being attempted in heavy industry, which enjoyed an unchallenged priority in the alloca-tion of capital and raw materials

Many of the incentives were tested first at enterprises in Sichuan like the Zigong factory when Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang worked as the provincial party secretary in the 1970s.

The first task in 1975, Mr. Wang said, was to restore order at the Zigong factory and resume production. "We launched mass production. We launched mass criticism of anarchy and bour-geois factionalism." he said, meaning that the radical trouble-makers had been warned to behave themselves. That year, the plant met its first output target

When Zhao Ziyang introduced his economic reforms in Sichuan in 1979, many factories were hesitant to try them out.

Xerox Says 2d-Period Net

Fell by 38% NEW YORK — Xerox Corp. reported Tuesday that second-quarter net fell 38 percent to $95.5 million from $153.2 million a year

The Stamford, Connecticutbased company blamed losses in its property and casualty insurance operations. Xerox's office-equipment business showed gams during the period, however.

Xerox said sales fell 1 percent to $2.257 billion in the second quarter from $2.26 billion a year earlier.

In the first six months of 1984. Xerox said, profit fell 21 percent to $221.6 million from $281.9 million a year earlier. Sales, however, rose 1 percent to $4.39 billion from $4.36

chief executive, and C. Peter McColough, chairman, said in a joint statement that they were gratified by the market activity in our office-equipment business, but obviously disappointed with the in-dustrywide deterioration that has taken place in the property and casualty business.

Another area where Xerox lost money was financial services. The company lost $7 million on financial services this year.

U.S. Steel Reports $140-MillionNet

PITTSBURGH - U.S. Steel Corp. said Tuesday it made a profit of $140 million, or $1.04 per share.

in the second quarter, compared with a loss of $112 million, or $1.25 per share, last year. The largest U.S. steelmaker re-ported first-half net income of $311 million, or $2.39 per share, compared with a loss of $230 million, or $2.56 per share, in the first six months of 1983.

Second-quarter sales reached nearly $4.9 billion, 12 percent up from $4.36 billion a year earlier. First-half sales in 1984 were $9.7 billion, 18 percent higher $8.23 billion a year earlier.

LONDON — Beecham Group PLC shares surged 20 pence to close at 308 pence Tuesday amid speculation that the drug and consumer product company would attract a takeover bid. Beecham said that it knew of no reason for the sudden rise in its share price, which brought the company's stock market value to about £2.2 billion ($2.9 billion). The company's shares have performed weak-

THE HAUNTING OF SUZANNA BLACKWELL

By Richard Setlowe, 355 pp. $14.95, Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 521 Fifth Ave, New York, N.Y., 10175.

Reviewed by Carolyn Banks

THE title of this novel suggests a ghost story, and the book is, to be sure, that. But it's a love story and a war story, too. The wonderful thing is that we can't separate the three into distinct threads; the plot consists of their coincidence.

The tale begins in 1958, when Suzanna Blackwell, shortly after her mother's funeral, is visited - not at all frighteningly - by her mother's ghost. In a way, Suzanna grows to become her mother, wearing the same perfume, adopting the same mannerisms. When she goes to Mare Island for the naval change-of-command ceremony that will see her father installed in his last post before retirement, still another ghost comes to call: that of her mother's lover.

Like her mother before her, Suzanna yields to his clove-scented allure. "He wore a white formal officer's uniform, exactly as he had been dressed in the photographs over which her mother had wept, and he smiled at her as sweetly and shyly as a bridegroom. . . As if she were a magnet drawn irresistibly to its opposite pole, she moved into his arms, at first slowly, and then in a rush. They embraced, then slowly danced. He was not a hallucination, not a dream." Not since "The Ghost and Mrs. Muir" has there been a shade as appeal

But meanwhile, there's Suzanna's earthly lover, Michael, a television producer who had spot about the World War II vessels moth-balled in the Mare Island harbor, the ghosts of the men who died aboard those ships reveal to Michael the secret that provokes, for Suzanna's father, a haunting of another sort: guilt.

Those ships! Richard Setlowe has made them — in part by juxtaposing them to the elegant "pillared mansions of the senior officers along Walnut Avenue" - seem as sinister as the House of Usher. They are "a great desolate armada - aircraft carriers, battle cruisers, assault transports, destroyers, and submarines - all packed stem to stern in tight rows along the length of a narrow, bleak pier." The author also gets us asking questions, and the right ones. He drops just the sort of hint that will keep us reading. In the receiving line at the naval base, for instance, Michael makes his first appearance. He shakes Suzanna's fa-ther's hand and "Suzanna had never before seen a look of instant and mutual contempt flash between two men who had apparently never met before. It was as if they had immediately recognized one another." We wait for the inevitable confrontation between the two but are unprepared for its consequences. Settlowe expertly balances the need for fulfilment of our expectations with our yearning for surprise.

Suzanna's father, because he is the official representative of war, is the closest thing the book has to a villain, and yet we feel for the man throughout. We are moved when he confesses to Suzanna that after he and his wife made love for the first time, "she cried. She cried as if her heart might break. I was tremendously touched by what I thought were her tears for her lost innocence. I admit I was a little slow. It didn't dawn on me for a long time that the reason she was crying her heart out was that it hadn't been him."

Setlowe is an able and effective writer. He is not afraid to use the time-tested devices of suspense and occult fiction - cliffhanging chapter endings, for example - but never lets them become gimmicks. His story tests rather. than strains our credulity. Be advised that "The Haunting of Suzanne Blackwell" is a thoughtfully done novel, not one of excess.

Carolyn Banks' most recent novel is "The Girls on the Row." She wrote this review for The Washington Post.

Fadeout on Conventions

By Russell Baker

Network tele-vision exposure has been mother's milk to politicians for 30 years now, and mother is finally tired of it.

Last spring the networks rationed camera time for candidates so tightly that to get more than 10 seconds on the tube they would have had to come out against dogs and children. Two hours in prime time was all they allowed the Democratic Convention. It sounds generous until you recall that conventions used to play from dawn to speech. Another swellest guy in the dawn even when the oratorical posturing was enough to make a cow bawl for mercy.

What's happening is plain to see. Nobody runs forever on television, not even Walter Cronkite. The politician is finally going the way of Perry Mason and Milton Berle.
Naturally, Republicans, whose fore Nixon resigned the presidency. convention occurs this month, are asking what it means for them.

If the networks did not suffer from sentimentality and the equal-time doctrine, it would probably mean curtains, for while story values were minimal at the Democratic Convention, the only question of the slightest interest about the Republican Convention is why the

The Republicans do have former President Ford booked for a world Ford may be, but he is a very dull speaker. For entertainment value the Republicans should have him interview Nixon. For one thing. Nixon is at his best in the interview format: for another, it would give Ford a chance to find

It should be no great technical challenge to prepare vats of acid water to be sprayed continuously from ceiling hoses for the four days of the convention.

Even if a few delegates came down with ailments stranger than pneumonia, a mere four days' exposure to acid rain would not be a reliable scientific study, but it would be entertaining to watch TV people interview Republicans on how they get the acid out of their hair after a hard day in the hall. That, folks, is winning television.

The Happiness of Bluebirds

By Angus Phillips Vashington Post Service

BELTSVILLE Maryland —
Both the executive director of the North American Bluebird Society and the man responsible for establishing Prince George's County, Maryland, as the self-proclaimed bluebird capital of the world agree that one of the sweetest things about bluebirds is the way they warble, but neither can duplicate the song.

"Well, I can try," said Mary Janetaios, the executive director, pursing her lips to emit a pair of tweets. "No, no, that's not it." "I don't know anyone who can duplicate the bluebird's song." said Larry Zeleny, who has devoted 18 years since he retired from the U.S. Department of Agriculture to saving the bluebird.

a lifelong fan of the gentle, elec-tric-blue thrush that in his Minnesota childhood was as common

The good news is that Zeleny. author of a book on bluebirds and former bluebird columnist for a birder's publication called the Purple Martin News, has developed a system whereby man can wage war on startings and spartows. When he retired in 1966, and won permission to set up blue-bird nesting boxes at the 7,000acre (2.800-hectare) research center, a bluebird sighting there was "But if you listen, you can hear the real thing," said Janetatos.

That you can now see, hear and enjoy bluebirds at the Beltsville lings, and that first year he had a Agricultural Research Center in nesting pair of bluebirds. By Maryland is chiefly thanks to Zeleny, 80, a former biochemist and produced from 100 to 200 baby bluebirds a season. Usually about half his nesting boxes are in use.

Zeleny guesses that 90 percent of Americans under 40 years old a harbinger of spring as the robin. of Americans under 40 years old.

"Most people think it's a mythi- ed 20 popular songs that mention cal bird because they hear about it all their lives but never see one," said Janetatos.

The decline since the turn of the century has been catastrophic, said Zeleny, as house sparrows and starlings, both imported from Europe in the 1800s, have evicted bluebirds from their traditional nesting sites.

The bluebird is a North American species, and there are still many in Canada — equally de-pendent on human help. Some remain year-round in Bermuda, where the society is also active. but information on how they are faring in Mexico and Central America is hard to come by.

At the Beltsville research center the casual visitor can drive along the narrow roadways and see bluebird after bluebird perched on the fences, in the wires, or feeding the young in the nesting boxes.

Unscrewing the top on one of his homemade boxes the other day, Zeleny found a perfect nest of coiled grasses and four tiny, pale blue eggs. In the next box lay day-old chicks, their mouths spread wide in hopes of a meal. In a box down the lane lay some 10day-old chicks, on their wings the first faint signs of the brilliant blue that distinguish the mature
